Highlights from 2014 SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo

What a great second year for the SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo! Between Jan. 16 and 17, 3,000 people attended the Expo. That is 30 percent more than last year. The exhibit area inside the Florence Civic Center expanded to a second room and housed 121 exhibitors. Many people enjoyed the chance to see the latest equipment or to talk with experts about a number of agriculture related topics. Here are some of the highlights below:

Hugh E. Weathers
Commissioner

Communications, Coalitions and Compromises

Across South Carolina, the last few weeks have been filled with many stories and comments in print, social media, and even on the church yard about potato farming and water. I have been involved in the Walther farm developments in Aiken County for a while now, and I can honestly say that the Walther family has been more than willing to be a good neighbor and show its concern for our state's natural resources. That willingness proved true late last month when Walther Farms and Friends of the Edisto (FRED) reached an agreement regarding the farm's surface water withdrawal from the Edisto River.

Agriculture is important to South Carolina's past, its present, and more importantly, its future. The natural resources of our state are important—for pleasure, for preservation of a great way of life, and for prosperity. Farmers provide food and fiber for South Carolina by the utilization of natural resources combined with labor, capital, management, and a lot of faith. When an issue or circumstance appears to set agriculture and natural resources at odds, communication is vital and compromise is required to move forward. The Walther Farm situation is just that.

It quickly became apparent that the Walther farm surface water withdrawal registration that was granted put agriculture and some natural resource advocates at odds.

A Boost for the SC Commissioner's School for Agriculture

Clemson University's Katie Black and Commissioner Hugh Weathers accept a check from Cullen Bryant of SC Advocates for Agriculture. Advocates sponsored the Commissioner's Breakfast which raised $6,250 for the SC Commissioner's School for Agriculture. Advocates also raised an additional $2,200 with a silent auction. Commissioner's School is held each summer at Clemson University for high school juniors and seniors and allows students to explore agriculture related careers.

James Cooley Receives Order of the Palmetto

Kathi and James Cooley of Strawberry Hill USA stand with Commissioner Hugh Weathers after James received the Order of the Palmetto. Commissioner Weathers presented the award on behalf of Governor Nikki Haley. James was honored for his contributions to SC agriculture and for his involvement with the community.

Grain Bin Safety Takes Center Stage at Expo

Crews lower Commissioner Hugh Weathers into a grain bin for a rescue demonstration. The National Education Center for Agricultural Safety conducted the training to teach first responders and farmers the proper way to enter a bin and how to rescue a trapped person.

Watermelons on the Move

The SC Watermelon Association has a lot to get excited about. From a new campaign to a new queen, the association will be going places watermelons have never been.

"Watermelon Fuels Athletes," the association's new marketing campaign, was rolled out last season and further explained at the annual meeting in Columbia on Jan. 17.

The event hosted retailers, wholesalers, growers and allied industry members from Louisiana to New Jersey. Grower and retailer education sessions, a live and silent auction with proceeds benefiting marketing and research throughout the industry, and the crowning of the 2014 SC Watermelon Queen were the highlights of the meeting.

"Not only was the event a great start to the year for watermelon growers, it also helped set up programs and activities for the coming year," said SC Watermelon Association marketing specialist Matt Cornwell. For the first time, the association will participate in the Cooper River Bridge Run on April 5 to promote "Watermelon Fuels Athletes."

Thankfully, years of coalition building between agricultural and environmental leaders provided a means to have effective communication and discuss compromise. When other agriculture leaders and I first sat down with the Walther family, I asked for and got a commitment from them to communicate openly and to be prepared to make compromises in their farm plan. And they have done just that.

The Walthers opened their farm to agricultural and environmental leaders to learn first-hand about the actual water usage, which would be about one-third of the amount allowed under the registration. Among other things, they made a commitment to reduce existing registration amounts by half. To prepare for a possible drought contingency plan, the farm will also dig a backup well to use ground water for irrigation, reducing river water usage by another 25%. The family will also make adjustments to the farm's second tract of land, and irrigate with ground water rather than withdraw from the Edisto. FRED accepted those proposed changes and in return agreed to drop a lawsuit against the farm.

I am pleased that Walther Farms and FRED engaged in open communication and compromise. Like other farmers in our state, the Walther family values natural resources and has demonstrated a willingness to help protect the Edisto River.

About a year ago the Walther family recognized the potential of being a part of South Carolina agriculture. Our soil type is suitable for growing potatoes and the projected harvest in June is a good time for selling the crop. Obviously the water supply, both ground and surface, is critical. Based on what I heard from them, the potato market can provide good prospects for the future of South Carolina farming. Growing and processing potatoes in South Carolina can provide new farming options and new jobs.

I welcome the Walther family to South Carolina agriculture based on several important facts. They have demonstrated good faith efforts and a strong desire to be advocates of both agricultural growth and preservation of our natural resources. They are a family working together, like many of the 27,000 plus farms in our state.

We are a state filled with family farms of all sizes. And our large farms are, for the most part, simply small farms that grew. Growth through new opportunities for our farmers –large and small- is one of the primary missions of the South Carolina Department of Agriculture. One way to provide opportunities is to bring investments in agriculture like the Walther's to add value to South Carolina farm products.

The Walther episode has reinforced my belief that we can grow our agricultural economy and protect our environment at the same time as long as we keep our lines of communication open and are willing to work toward compromise.

Cornbread Jubilee Celebrates Heritage & History

The fourth annual Cornbread Jubilee has changed locations and has expanded. The jubilee is Saturday, Feb. 15 at the Jim Hamilton - L.B. Owens Airport in Columbia, and will feature information about corn, its heritage and importance, and other grain crops.

"The main reason people come is to hear about our corn crop and how important it is," said founder Sonya Hodges. "From the clothes we wear to wallpaper to soap, all have corn in it. Corn is the grain referred to in the Bible. It's been around for millions of years."

The festivities will kick off at 9 a.m. with a wreath laying at Memorial Park to honor servicemen. Historian Teresa Wilson Kemp will speak. A quilt show featuring the Underground Railroad will be on display, as well as an exhibit from the wheat council on how the Methodist church is connected with the wheat crop.

Volunteers have been busy baking 10 different kinds of cornbread, Mrs. Hodges said. She expects to have "3,000 pieces of delicious cornbread. We are using a jambalaya corn bread recipe from Martha White, gypsy corn bread, and many others. It's all free." Various types of corn meal will be for sale.

"It's a jubilee, not just a festival," Mrs. Hodges explained. "Corn is a crop that has been growing in South Carolina since 33 BC at the Topper Site." A member of the SC Ag Council and the National Corn Growers Association, Mrs. Hodges has done a lot of research on corn throughout history.

For more information call Mrs. Hodges at 803-361-6444.

Research shows that watermelon puree is better for athletes than many commercial sports drinks, Cornwell said. He will have information about watermelons available before and after the run.

A highlight of the weekend was the crowning of Brooke Hastings Allender as the new watermelon queen. A resident of Duncan, Brooke attends the University of South Carolina – Upstate, where she is a senior majoring in communications with an emphasis in public relations. She is on the Presidents List, Dean's List and is a member of the Gamma Phi Beta Honors Society. As a student intern for SC House of Representatives member Donna Wood, Brooke attended a women's caucus conference as her communication director.

"The association feels that Brooke will be an outstanding representative of our industry and the state of South Carolina as she promotes South Carolina watermelon in 2014," Cornwell said.

Proceeds from the event will also help fund research performed by Clemson University, a vital part of the industry.

South Carolina watermelons are available from July through September. Local producers grow 40 varieties of the sweet fruit, which has become a staple at family gatherings during the summer. SC watermelons are also shipped across the country.

Learn Technologies for Reducing Climate Risk

A workshop on Advanced Farming Technologies for Reducing Climate Risk will be held Feb. 11 at Edisto Research & Education Center in Blackville. Geared toward farmers, extension agents, and crop consultants, the free workshop will run from 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. with lunch included.

Researchers, specialists, Extension professionals and other farmers will share management alternatives that can make production more efficient and more profitable.

The USDA-sponsored session will cover drought management, new strategies, crop insurance and the latest climate outlook. A special section on irrigation technologies will address such issues as tools for managing center pivots, drip irrigation, sod-based rotation, conservation tillage, cover crops, and more.

For the workshop lunch reservation go to <http://www.agroclimate.org/seclimate/events>.
