Collection Date Set for Unwanted Pesticides Event Open to Any SC Farmer or Homeowner

The South Carolina Department of Agriculture (SCDA) is partnering with Richland County Solid Waste and Recycling Department to accept unwanted or unused pesticides from farmers and homeowners. Richland County is holding its annual Richland Recycles Day at SC State Fairgrounds. Although most of the recycling event is only open to residents of Richland County, waste pesticides will be accepted from residents of any SC county. Pesticides will not be accepted from any type of commercial business or commercial applicator. Other collections events are planned for later this year that will be open to commercial applicators in the state.

- Hours of operation will be 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. on May 16.

- Location: SC State Fairground, 1200 Rosewood Dr., Columbia, SC, 29201

- SCDA will have personnel on site to monitor pesticide collection.

- Quantities accepted will be limited to 2500 pounds of solid and 300 gallons of liquid at no charge.

- No fertilizer (unless it is combined with a pesticide such as weed and feed), compressed gas cylinders (metal cylinder with a valve) or empty containers will be collected in the pesticide location of the event.

Laws Give Tax Breaks for Land Conservation

By Wallace Wood, Executive Director
Upper Savannah Land Trust

It can pay to protect your farm and forest land from industrial and commercial development. There are generous federal and state tax breaks for landowners who permanently preserve scenic, environmentally sensitive, prime farm land or historical properties. There are also USDA programs that may pay to protect farms that have prime soils.

The preservation technique, known as a conservation easement, is a binding agreement typically made between a landowner and a nonprofit group called a land trust that places development restrictions on the property. Restrictions usually include industrial and commercial development, high density subdivision, strip mining and outdoor advertising such as bill boards.

Landowners usually retain the right to farm the land, to practice forestry or to engage in other agricultural activities. There can be limited subdivisions of the property for house lots and agricultural buildings. The land can be sold, but the new owner has to abide by the terms of the agreement.

SCDA Magazine Wins SC 2013 Notable Documents Award

The South Carolina Department of Agriculture (SCDA) is always working to help all South Carolinians better understand agriculture and the industry's impact on our daily lives. There are many ways this task is accomplished, but last year the department had the opportunity to communicate that message through a magazine.

The first edition of South Carolina: Our Amazing Agriculture was distributed across the state late last spring. The magazine is geared toward consumers, and the purpose is to educate them about the many facets of SC agriculture. From feature articles on agritourism destinations, to our growing peanut crop, to growing consumer demand for buying local, and a look at the state's cattle industry, the magazine provided a great overview of agriculture, which is part of the state's leading industry – agribusiness.

Hulen Bivins, SC State Library Director presenting the 2013 Notable State Documents Award to Commissioner Hugh Weathers.

Because Weather Happens....

Weather affects us all. And since Mother Nature is always in control and we can't do anything to change the weather, we can certainly prepare for bad weather events. We cannot plan the weather, but we can certainly plan for the weather.

Our South Carolina Emergency Management Division (SCEMD) is one of the best disaster response agencies in the nation. In fact, SCEMD Chief of Operations Mike Russell says South Carolina has a nationally accredited emergency management program that supports all 46 counties and their first responders. Their goal is to keep our citizens safe as the various agencies deal with natural disasters.

This spring—as they do every year—our emergency and disaster responders are attending a series of workshops so they will be better prepared to deal with emergencies. The variety of the groups involved is really impressive: they include law enforcement, DHEC, the Department of Transportation, utility companies, public safety, Clemson University Livestock-Poultry Health (LPH), the National Guard, and of course, the SC Department of Agriculture, to name a few. Our department actually has several groups involved. They deal with food safety, inspection, and animal issues.

At the State Emergency Response Team (SERT) training in April, Russell staged a mock disaster. His purpose was to make sure everyone understands the protocol for managing big events.

Because Weather Happens....

For example, when trees are in the road, people assume that the department of transportation should move them, right? Not necessarily. If there are power lines involved, the utility companies must send in crews to deal with potential live power lines. But how do they get in, if the roads are blocked? And who decides which roads take priority?

Fortunately, the state has emergency plans that are flexible enough to adapt to the unknown. While this exercise didn't address livestock issues specifically, Dr. Charlotte Krugler with Clemson LPH mentioned that people need to make arrangements for their pets and livestock, since most shelters won't accept animals. The next edition of the Market Bulletin will feature some tips and best practices to help livestock owners prepare for a natural disaster or other emergencies.

The scenario in the SERT exercise was heavy rains in the Upstate (imagine that!) which caused extensive flooding. Assuming that many people were forced out of their homes and sent to shelters, the plan was put in effect. Pertinent issues were discussed, such as how do you get food to the shelter? Who pays for the food? How is it transported? If the power is out, what backup energy sources are available?

The point of the exercise is to point out some holes in the local plans so that the agencies involved could do a better job. To make the exercise more interesting, he threw in a massive storm approaching the coast. How would emergency resources be divided? Would the National Guard leave their posts in the Upstate to move to the coast? I think Mr. Murphy must have been laying down his law!

The state's emergency management team has worked to prepare a timeline for approaching hurricanes. By the time the 48-hour mark arrives, they are deep into preparations for dealing with the storm. The State Emergency Operations Center in West Columbia becomes fully activated with staff from virtually every state agency.

Evacuation traffic is a major challenge. I know—I've watched more than once on I-26. Russell noted that people leaving home "are safer in your car than in your beach house when a storm hits." He added, "You should move away from a potential disaster that could kill you, regardless of what plans you may have had before." The recurring theme was that it's better to leave early than to suffer the consequences of a hurricane or flood first-hand.

What happens after the storm is vitally important to SCEMD. First they must assess the damage by sending responders to the worst-hit areas. Debris removal, restoration of power, water, communication, and security are priorities. And many times they have to rescue people.

Mother Nature doesn't much care who she inconveniences. The ice storm in February took out thousands of trees across our state, and folks are still dealing with the clean-up. But, we are very grateful that no one was injured.

We can't control the weather, but we can be prepared. We'll keep a close eye on the drill so we can help folks be better prepared for the forces of nature. Find out all about what your state does about emergencies on SCEMD's website, www.scmd.org.

Food2Market Emphasizes Food Safety

A two-day Food2Market Food Safety Workshop on June 25 and 26 will teach food entrepreneurs how to produce safe foods for the market.

Topics include planning for food safety, product testing, packaging, and labeling, as well as record keeping.

The day-long sessions will be held at the conference center at the SC Botanical Gardens in Clemson, with an evening reception on June 25.

Register by June 12 for $150; the fee increases to $175 through June 20. Space is limited.

Go to <https://shopping.clemson.edu> (search Food2Market) to register.

SCDA Magazine Wins Award

Last month, the South Carolina State Library recognized SCDA's publication with a 2013 Notable State Documents Award. The magazine was one of ten publications to receive the award. Commissioner Hugh Weathers accepted the award on behalf of the department. You can find a copy of the magazine at the State Library in Columbia.

Pick Some Berries, Make Some Memories

Ripe, juicy strawberries—who doesn't love them? Local growers have their freshest, tastiest berries ready for you now. You can pick strawberries yourself, knowing that they are grown right on the soil on which you're standing. Or let the experts select them at the peak of flavor and package them for you.

Growers all over the state are reporting one of their best crops ever.

Hunter Farms in Easley has about four acres of strawberries this year. Eric Hunter, his wife Kristi and their son Ryan all help on the farm. They also grow plugs—about half a million of them—and ship them to other strawberry growers across the Southeast. Their berries are luscious.

Ambrose Family Farm on Wadmalaw Island says their crop looks beautiful. They have been picking "tons of strawberries," in addition to a big U-pick business. Folks lucky enough to live nearby can be part of the Community Supported Agriculture program, which means they get bags of fresh produce—including strawberries—every week.

Cottle Strawberry Farm in Columbia also uses natural growing practices on their 12 acres of strawberries. In fact, they planted an extra acre of strawberries this year to meet the demand for both U-pick and ready-picked.

Willard Farms near Gable has a fantastic strawberry crop this year. Jay Willard says his favorite way to eat strawberries is over good vanilla ice cream. "It's almost like heaven," he says. Buy an extra gallon or two for the freezer, and make your own fresh strawberry ice cream this summer.

Many of the farms use natural growing practices, and quite a few sell to local restaurants.

Kissed with dew and ripened by the sun, fresh strawberries are worth the drive to one of the many local Certified SC Growers who specialize in good taste.

For the tastiest strawberries you'll ever eat, see www.certifiedscgrows.org for a list of strawberry fields near you. Come make some memories!

SC Ag Council to Hear About Food Hubs

The SC Agricultural Council will meet on May 8 at the SC Farm Bureau Office in Cayce. Registration begins at 11 a.m., with lunch at 11:30.

Katie Welborn, a community organizer for The Midlands Local Food Collaborative, is the speaker. She will share information on local food production, the potential for small farms to scale up, and the feasibility of a Food Hub. She'll share ideas from "Making Small Farms Big Business." The meeting will adjourn at 12:30.

Lunch is $10 for SCAC members who register by May 6. Registration at the door or for non-members is $15.

Tax Breaks

The difference between the land's unrestricted value and the value with the conservation easement is called the conservation value. This is the amount allowed as a charitable deduction.

Under the provisions in the tax law, landowners can generally deduct the value of the contribution up to 30% of their adjusted gross income (AGI) per year. If you cannot deduct the full amount of your gift in one year, you can deduct the remaining amount over the next 5 years.

The Bush era tax cuts included a provision which enhanced the federal deductions. This provision has expired and been extended several times. It is currently being considered for extension again. It allows up to 50% AGI to be deducted per year and allows for 16 years to use it up. Also, farmers or ranchers or those with forestry operations who earn at least half of their income from their land can claim deductions up to 100% of their AGI. This does not have to be average yearly income. Sales of products can be timed in the year that a conservation easement is made to meet this criteria.

The state of South Carolina and local governments offer an incentive to conserve ag and forest land as well. In addition to accepting the charitable contribution to reduce income, South Carolina also gives a tax credit of 25% of the value of the conservation value up to $250 per acre. This credit can be used against state taxes or can be sold for cash.

The federal Farm Bill provides funds for purchasing conservation easements on highly productive farm lands. Since the 2014 Farm Bill has just recently been passed, the regulations for these programs have not been published. Contact your local USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service office for details.

Conservation easements have come under scrutiny of the IRS because of inflated values of the deduction. So, it is important to choose a reputable appraiser who gives an honest appraisal.

The land trust that holds the easement has the responsibility to monitor the easement property annually to make sure the wishes of the landowner are being carried out. This is especially important as land changes owners.

Before committing to an easement which is binding forever, a family has to be sure it wants to do this. Careful consideration needs to be given to tax and income implications.

It is very important to choose a land trust that has similar goals of land stewardship as those of the landowner. A list of land trusts that serve your area can be found at the Land Trust Alliance web site, www.lta.org.

The mission of Upper Savannah Land Trust is to encourage and support conservation of natural and scenic land, farms, forests, waterways and open spaces in the eight-county area which includes Abbeville, Anderson, Edgefield, Greenwood, Laurens, McCormick, Newberry and Saluda.
