Equipment Auctions Offer Options for Farmers

Great bargains, networking are popular ways to spend winter days

Items at auction vary from this eight wheel hay rake to every conceivable piece of farm equipment.

By Marsha Hewitt

What do farmers do during the winter? Go to farm equipment sales, of course. Not only are they looking for great deals on used farm machinery, they see friends from near and far. It's a day to socialize as well as do business.

Farm auctions seem to fall under two broad categories: consignments, and liquidations. Consignment sales can be held either at the auction company's permanent facility, or at a farm or host site. Retirement sales, estate sales, foreclosures, down-sizing or liquidations typically are conducted on the farmer's property. They are often absolute auctions, meaning everything on the yard is sold without reserve, regardless of the price bid.

Consignment auctions might be absolute, or they may have reserve prices set by the owner of the equipment. If the reserve price isn't met, the piece is a no-sale and no one is happy. The seller has to pay a no sale fee and either has to haul his equipment back home or leave it for the next auction.

Most big equipment sales are held during the winter, in the down time between harvesting and planting. "Farmers know what they

Farmers not only look for bargains, they reconnect with old friends from across the state.

A Click and a Handshake

Isn't it refreshing that no matter how advanced technology gets, we still depend on old-fashioned approaches to getting things done? Don't get me wrong – I'm a big fan of technology and the important role it plays in our personal lives and in agriculture.

Our industry is changing before our eyes, and high-tech advancements are making farming more efficient and innovative. But at the end of the day, a person-to-person conversation and a handshake are still the hallmarks of successful transactions and relationships.

Recently I've been talking and writing about a new initiative at SCDA that will bring together the best of technology and relationships. It's called ACRE - the Agribusiness Center for Research and Development. ACRE has six different areas of emphasis, including one that may sound familiar to you: Farm Link.

The SCDA Farm Link program facilitates conversations between farm owners who wish to sell their land and farm seekers who wish to buy. Farm Link has been around for a few years, and ACRE will refresh and enhance it. New Farm Link elements will include program development and promotion, collaboration with Clemson Extension for farm transition workshops and materials, development need for the next year, and they are in the market for equipment," said Donald Dukes, owner of Dukes Auction Group of North. He sells between 1,200 and 2,000 items in a typical one-day sale, and about half of that is farm equipment.

"We have three auction trucks running during the sale, and we hire about 30 people that day," he continued. "We'll have four to eight auctioneers, with as many ring men and ticket writers, plus another eight people in the office."

Setting up an auction takes months of preparation, with the two weeks prior to the sale being the most intense. That's when farmers either haul their equipment to the sale or hire the auction company to do it for them.

of a user interface on the SCDA website, and facilitation of links between agribusinesses and farmers.

The updated Farm Link webpage will feature a "matchmaker" tool complete with maps showing land available for sale, rent or lease, as well as priorities of prospective buyers and renters. This process has a human side, too -- SCDA will help connect sellers and prospects, as well as new buyers, with Clemson Extension as needed.

Farm Link can be an important bridge between current and next-generation farmers. We know that the future of agriculture in South Carolina depends on new and young farmers getting into the business. A healthy combination of technology and relationships will foster their transition into this ever-changing landscape. Stay tuned for more exciting information about Farm Link and ACRE as we head towards spring.

Pee Dee Waterfowl Workshop Offered

A workshop for waterfowl managers and private wetland owners will be held Feb. 7 at The Catfish Farm in Marion, with a social the night before.

Co-hosted by Richardson Construction Company, the workshop and field tours are coordinated by Clemson Cooperative Extension, the James C. Kennedy Waterfowl & Wetlands Conservation Center, Nemours Wildlife Foundation, SC Department of Natural Resources, and Winyah Land and Timber.

Information will be presented by waterfowl and wetlands experts on best habitat and hunt management practices for waterfowl areas in the Pee Dee and other areas with non-tidal wetlands.

Newly renovated and expanded, The Catfish Farm contains world class managed wetlands featuring flooded crops such as rice and corn, moist soil management of native vegetation, green tree reservoirs, and deep ponds that provide a diverse array of habitat types for migrating waterfowl.

This workshop provides an opportunity to interact with South Carolina's leading waterfowl and wetlands experts to discuss waterfowl biology, wetland design and management, crop planting and maintenance, controlling weeds and nuisance wildlife, as well as managing hunters and hunts to improve bird retention.

The field tour offers the opportunity to see established wetlands that have been managed for many years with waterfowl in mind as well as visit newly constructed wetlands.

The Feb. 7 workshop is $50, but there is an option for overnight lodging for those who would like to come for dinner on Feb. 6, for an additional $25. Participants who attend the social can interact with students and researchers conducting waterfowl research at the Kennedy Center.

Lodging can be arranged by contacting Ben Powell at bpowel2@clemson.edu or 843-546-4481. The farm is located at 1199 Terrell's Bay Road, Marion.

Equipment Auctions

The auction company places each piece in a precise row, allowing room for the trucks, auctioneers, ticket takers, and bidders.

The pace is fast, so bidders must be alert to the auctioneer's sing-song chant. Many's the tale of a farmer who intended to buy a certain item but got distracted talking to his buddies and missed the bid.

Equipment is sold as is, where is, meaning there are no refunds. Sellers pay a 10 percent commission, and the auction company may charge a small administration fee to the buyer. Many farmers follow the sales looking for bargains, while others want a specific piece of equipment. Sales are held regardless of the weather, and they also a great way for farmers to reconnect with friends from all over the state.

Upcoming sales:

Feb. 3: Kingstree Auction Company in Kingstree

Feb. 10: Bob Robeson & Associates, Chesterfield

Feb. 24: Dukes Auction Group, North

March 3: Clarendon Hall in Summerton, J.G. Blocker
