Clemson University's Edisto Research and Education Center in Blackville, was a huge success again this year. It was chock-full of field studies and seminars geared toward helping our farmers develop a broader working knowledge of growing this popular commodity.

Matt Cornwell, executive director of the S.C. Watermelon Association, kicked off the event by updating attendees on this year's attracting beneficial pollinators.

watermelon season. A host of agriculture experts shared the latest research related to growing watermelons and other crops. Extension horticulturist Dr. Gilbert Miller led watermelon trials, testing and sampling more than 80 varieties. He and Clemson plant pathologist Dr. Anthony Keinath presented research on the relationship of fungicide application and watermelon yield per acre. New technology caught the group's attention as Clemson showed how unmanned aerial vehicles aid in watermelon production by taking infrared pictures of the fields. The UAVs can collect a wide range of field data to help farmers improve crop health and soil quality and eradicate pests and disease.

The tour also included the opportunity to sample more than 80 different varieties of watermelon straight from the field. The program returned to the office complex for cold samples of watermelon and lunch. During lunch, attendees heard from Dr. George Askew, Clemson's Vice President of Public Service and Agriculture, S.C. Commissioner of Agriculture Hugh Weathers, Clemson President Dr. James P. Clements,

The annual Watermelon Field Day, held at and David Winkles, President of S.C. Farm Bureau.

Given this year's focus on pollinators, Clemson Extension bee specialist Jennifer Tsuruda gave a presentation on honey bee biology. She explained the vital connection between pollinators and the success of crops. She also shared tips to deal with pests that could damage fruits and vegetables, while Commissioner's School: Another Great Year!

It is rewarding for me to see high school students start preparing for their futures, and the South Carolina Commissioner's School for Agriculture provides that opportunity each summer. This year, 41 high school juniors and seniors from South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Ohio, New York, and Texas attended the It is rewarding for me to and Texas attended the academic program held July 18-24 at Clemson University.

Commissioner's School gave these students an inside look at various academic offerings and career options in agriculture and natural resources. Throughout the week, the group took part in academic projects, field tours and laboratory exercises, all while gaining skills in leadership and professional development.

The week started with a stream assessment at Wildcat Creek, where the students collected specimens to determine the water quality of the creek based on the plants and wildlife that have created their habitat there. The students then spent the next two days following pre-selected academic track that included animal science, forestry and natural resources, and plant science. The animal science group spent their time touring the horse, dairy, and poultry farms, as well as learning how to properly assist a cow during birth with Clemson's new calving simulator.

More than 80 different varieties of watermelon straight from the field were available for sampling.

> Following lunch Tsuruda led a bee hive tour. Some folks suited up and entered the colony while others watched from a nearby bus with a live audio feed. During the field tour, Bayer Crop Science highlighted their Feed A Bee campaign while passing out packets of Pollinator Wildflower Mix.

S.C. Ag Council Presents Humans vs. Bugs & Weeds

The summer quarterly meeting of the S.C. Agricultural Council will "Chase the Red Queen" with Dr. Andy Dyer. A professor of ecology at USC Aiken, Dr. Dyer is the author of "Chasing the Red Queen," the first book to apply the Red Queen hypothesis to agriculture. Dr. Dyer examines one of the world's most between predator (us) and prey (bugs and weeds). As a result, farmers are caught in a vicious cycle of having to use pesticides to beat back progressively resistant pests. The meeting, which is open to the public, will be held on Thursday, Aug. 13 at the S.C. Farm Bureau office in Cayce. Registration pressing problems -- the race to feed the world's seven billion people -- as a biological case study

He illustrates that when selection pressure increases, species evolve in response. That creates a never-ending, escalating competition

11 a.m. The program ends at begins at 12:30 p.m.

Deadline for reservations for members and their guests is Aug. 7. Registration at the door is $15 per person, which includes a catered lunch. Call 803-534-2409 to reserve a seat.

The forestry and natural resources group enjoyed sessions in Clemson's experimental forest, through wildlife tracking and trapping and learning more about tree care. They also toured the aquaculture and aquaponics facilities and attended a session with S.C. Department of Natural Resources. The plant science group learned about plant irrigation, participated in a two-part soils activity, toured Clemson's organic farm and learned more about peaches at Musser Research Farm.

The group was back together at the end of the week for an exciting whitewater rafting trip down the wild and scenic Chattooga River and finished the week with a turf grass session in Death Valley.

The evenings were just as busy, too. On Monday night the group participated in a discussion meet. The students were given three current issues in agriculture to research before coming to Commissioner's School. They competed in two rounds where they were judged based on their ability to work together to create and communicate a solution to the issue provided. They may have better ideas than some I hear coming from grownups. The group spent Tuesday sell their smoothie. I joined the group on Thursday evening for an Etiquette Dinner at the Madren Center. My wife, Blanche, spoke to the group about the importance of practicing good manners and how to apply them in work and social settings. The week ended with a closing reception in the Life Sciences building on Clemson's campus. I enjoyed meeting the students' families and getting to speak to the group about the importance of educating the next generation of agribusiness leaders. It was a great way to wrap up another successful week.

The group spent Tuesday evening creating smoothie recipes with Certified SC produce and developing a marketing strategy to help sell their smoothie.

Activities at the Commissioner's School ranged from studying trees to dissecting fish. Caroline Sharpe, left, and others in the forestry section learned about urban tree care on the Clemson campus. Martina Leake and Bryce Compton, right, discuss their fish in the anatomy lab. Students traveled from as far away as Texas to take part in the annual academic program for high school seniors.

Truck and ATV Offered as Prizes to Farm Bureau Winners

Applications for S.C. Farm Bureau's Young Farmer & Rancher 2016-17 Achievement Award are due Sept. 1. Among the prizes are a new GMC truck and a trip to Phoenix for American Farm Bureau's annual meeting. The competition is for individuals or married couples actively engaged in farming.

The award acknowledges success in agricultural production and leadership. The top three applications will be named state finalists. Each finalist receives a $1,000 cash prize and a one-night stay at the state conference in Clemson on Feb. 5.

Applications for Excellence in Agriculture are due Oct. 1. Finalists each receive $500 and a one-night stay at the conference in Clemson. The winner will receive a new Polaris Sportsman 570 ATV and free conference trips.

more graduated than 425 students. The program is a great partnership between the S.C. Department of Agriculture and Clemson University's College of Agriculture, Forestry and Life Sciences. It is supported financially by many fine South Carolina organizations and companies that realize the importance of this endeavor. Applications for next year's program will be released in January of 2016.

from the food to the art itself. The exhibition highlighted 28 South Carolina artisans and their work, which consists of many interesting objects.

The dinner featured live music performed by the Ruby Brunettes, hand-crafted beer from River Rat Brewery, and seasonal local food prepared by Bourbon and Rosso Trattoria, both of which are Fresh on the Menu restaurants. The hors d'oeuvres were prepared by Chef Ambassador Brandon Velie, owner of Juniper in Ridge Spring.

Artisan Leigh Magar, owner of Magar Hatworks in Spartanburg, creates handmade garments, accessories, and art by using indigo and natural dyes for her garments.
