Midlands Farm Tour: Local farms, local flavor, local fun!

From strawberries to honey, and heirlooms to heritage hogs, this year's Midlands Farm Tour has local variety at its best. The Midlands Food Alliance invites the public to meet local farmers on their farms and learn about the importance of supporting them. The food alliance is a group of farmers, chefs, and eaters who care about local food production.

The 2016 Midlands Farm Tour will be held Saturday, May 21 from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m. The tour is a self-guided event. At each farm, tour-goers can meet the farmers and staff, their families, tour the property, explore what is harvested, and ask questions.

Participants are encouraged to sign the Local Food Pledge at any farm stop, committing to spend $10 weekly on SC-grown products. Most farms will have goods for sale and a variety of items to sample.

A Midlands Farm to Fork Restaurant Feast will be May 13-21, leading up to the Midlands Farm Tour. Selected restaurants will serve special menu items from farms on the tour, with an emphasis on local flavor.

Included on the tour are Six Berry Farm, Mercer House Estate Winery, USC Community Farm & Garden, Patchwork Farms, Terra Kotta Farm, Bee Trail Farm, Wright Farm of SC, the State Farmers Market, Sandhills Heirlooms, and Humble Farms.

The farmers will be busy conducting tours, so volunteers are needed at every farm to check in guests, sell passes, and act as friendly ambassadors. Volunteers will be invited to the Farmer Potluck on May 12 at Mercer House Estate Winery.

This farm tour is more than an event -- it's an opportunity to sow the seeds for positive social and economic change. If every resident purchased $5 of food each week directly from a farmer, the impact would be about $1.2 billion a year.

Ticket prices are $15, which includes all farms on the tour. Children under 10, WIC, SNAP and EBT beneficiaries and families are admitted free of charge. Early-bird tickets for $10 are available until May 20. Purchase tickets or sign up to volunteer at www.MidlandsFarmTour.com.

The Best Time to Live in South Carolina

Spring is one of the best times of the year to call South Carolina home. The long-awaited warm weather brings us more than just an excuse to enjoy the outdoors; it also means it is peak season for all our favorite Certified SC Grown produce! From strawberries to peaches to okra, it's the easy, and tasty, way to support our state's farmers.

South Carolina is home to 164 Certified Roadside Markets. For over 40 years, these great stops have been the official roadside markets across the state. Because they must meet certain standards, we are confident that the participating markets are reputable and offer a good supply of South Carolina farm products.

In addition to our Roadside Markets, we have over 120 community-based farmers markets. Many of these markets participate in the Farmers Market Nutrition Program and are able to accept WIC vouchers thus increasing access to local fruits and vegetables.

If you're in the Upstate, Midlands or Pee Dee, there's a State Farmers Market near you. Our markets feature everything from seasonal offerings to baked goods to artisanal crafts. The State Farmers Market in Columbia will have fresh peaches and watermelons all summer long.

USDA to Host Statewide Workshops Explaining Assistance Programs

U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) agencies are teaming up in May to provide multiple workshops aimed at helping Jasper, Orangeburg, Chester, Florence and surrounding county residents with USDA investments in conservation practices, housing, community facilities, businesses and infrastructure.

During the state-wide workshops, area residents, landowners, community organizations, businesses, foundations, schools, universities, and faith-based and other groups can expect to learn about a number of programs from cost-sharing and financial assistance to loans and grants.

"The USDA in South Carolina is coming together to help grow our economy by investing in our rural communities, farmers, makers and innovators, and increasing opportunities for families," said Ann English, state conservationist, Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) in South Carolina. "We are one team working to bring economic opportunity directly to South Carolinians where they live."

There will be two opportunities to learn about USDA programs at each workshop location. The workshop will last approximately three hours. The first workshop will begin at 9 a.m. and the second workshop will begin at 1 p.m. The same information will be presented at all workshops.

Agencies participating in the workshops include: Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS), Farm Service Agency (FSA), Rural Development, Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) and Animal Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS).

Grandpa's Favorite BBQ Pork

3 1/2 pound boneless blade pork roast
3 T unsalted butter
1/3 cup onion, diced
1 cup ketchup
1/2 cup water

1/3 cup lemon juice or cider vinegar
2 T brown sugar, packed
2 T mustard
2 T Worcestershire sauce
1/8 tsp salt

In a medium saucepan over medium heat, melt the butter. Add the onion and cook, stirring occasionally, until translucent, about 5 minutes. Add the ketchup, water, lemon juice, brown sugar, mustard, Worcestershire sauce and salt and bring to a boil over high heat. Reduce to a simmer and cook for 10 minutes. Remove from the heat and set aside to cool. Place the pork in a slow cooker. Reserve 1 cup of the sauce and set the remaining aside in the refrigerator. Use a meat injector to inject the 1 cup of sauce into the meat, piercing it all over 6 to 10 times (depending on your meat injector, you may need to strain the sauce first). Cover the meat and cook on low 6 to 8 hours, until the meat is very tender. About 30 minutes before the meat is done, bring the remaining sauce to room temperature.

Serve the meat with the sauce. Serves 8-10.

The traditional shopping options shouldn't be overlooked though. Besides farmers markets, you can shop for local produce and products at your neighborhood grocery store. Look for the Certified SC Grown logo in the produce section. Many stores even have a section with many of our Certified SC Specialty Foods. There's also a variety of "value-added" products made right here in South Carolina, like Duke's Mayonnaise, Carolina Pride meats and Margaret Holmes vegetables.

Even though school will soon be out for the summer, we want to make sure that students have access to the freshest ingredients. Through Farm to Institution, we connect student nutrition managers with local farmers. We also help build student interest in the program by providing branding on the menus.

To find out what's fresh growing each month, I recommend a Harvest Finder, available at many of our events. This handy pocket guide shows the produce grown in South Carolina and is a great way to engage kids in learning about eating seasonally.

I encourage you to get out and eat local this peak season. Enjoy a great time to live here in the Palmetto State. Visit www.agriculture.sc.gov for a complete listing of Certified Roadside Markets, Community Based Markets and more. We are fortunate to have a bounty of crops to enjoy for months on end.

If you don't see Certified SC Grown in your favorite grocery store, ask for it! As you'll hear us say, it's a matter of taste.

Crop Outlooks Are Optimistic

By Jim Melvin
Public Information, PSA
Clemson University

2015 brought devastation for the state's row crop farmers. Now that it's planting season, cotton and soybean farmers are hoping for a better year.

About 80 percent of South Carolina's cotton is planted the first week of May. Some growers plant a little earlier or later, depending on what other crops they might have in their rotation. For instance, farmers who are also growing peanuts might plant their cotton a couple of weeks later so that they will have time to get the peanuts in first.

Cotton growers hope for a mild, moist spring followed by a summer averaging 3 to 5 inches of rain a month. When it comes to heat and drought, cotton is one of the most tolerant crops, but temperatures persistently above 95 degrees and/or weeks without rain can damage quality and quantity.

"Clemson has a strong research team working with cotton," said Michael Jones, associate professor and cotton specialist at Clemson University's Pee Dee Research and Education Center. "Most of what I do here at Pee Dee is variety testing. Most of the varieties that are released to our growers come from Texas and even the far West. Our team has to determine which of these varieties are best able to withstand the environmental conditions in South Carolina."

Cotton farmers are hoping for a fresh start – and maybe a healthy dose of luck – in 2016. "We can still produce a great crop this year. It just depends on our weather," Jones said. "South Carolina has the technology and willpower to grow the best cotton out there. Growers just need a few things to go their way this time around."

What's in store for soybean growers in 2016?

Soybeans are usually planted between the middle of May and the middle of June, according to Benjamin Fallen, a renowned soybean breeder at Clemson University's Pee Dee Research and Education Center.

The timing of rain is more critical than intensity. If growers plant their seeds when it's too dry, the seeds won't begin to develop, but with a little rain, they will grow into large, hardy plants.

"There's a relatively short window between the time you plant the beans and the time they germinate," Fallen said. "If it's real hot during the spring, they'll just sit in the ground and bake. You either need to have good moisture already in the ground, or a little rain from the skies to prompt them to germinate."

Once the heat of summer arrives, farmers will be rooting for weekly rains that drop an inch or two at a time. This will keep the beans growing at a healthy pace.

"Three to five inches a week during the summer is about how much water the soil around here can store," Fallen said. "There is only a certain window of time within which soybeans grow vegetatively, and then you have a certain amount of time that they grow reproductively. All of this is crucial to the end product."

Fallen has been working feverishly over the past several years breeding soybean varieties acquired from around the world. His goal is to produce higher-yielding soybeans with improved composition that will make them better suited to be used as biofuels, more resistant to insects and disease, and more tolerant to drought.

"I've been focusing on building a breeding program that will produce 21st-century soybeans for South Carolina," said Fallen. His fingers are crossed that 2016 will be a rebound year for the soybean industry.

In April, South Carolina 4-H members attended the National Conference in Washington D.C. The members won scholarships based on excellence in their 4-H project areas.

During the week, members participated in round-table discussions and researched important agricultural topics including climate change, backyard farming and irrigation practices. They then developed campaigns and presented them to several federal agencies including USDA, US Department of Education and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Members also met with their elected officials to discuss the importance of South Carolina 4-H and Clemson Extension and ask for continued support.
