Re-Soil Keeps Food Waste Out of Landfills

High quality compost is available for gardens

By Marsha Hewitt
Editor, SC Market Bulletin

Not many people get to turn a childhood dream into reality, much less a full time job.

Anthony Centola got the idea for his Re-Soil project when he was in the sixth grade in New York, studying conservation and recycling. A self-professed science nerd, he thought, "What a great idea for a business. But I ran the numbers and decided it wasn't profitable."

Tons of waste fruits and vegetables are recycled into valuable compost instead of being dumped in a landfill.

Fast forward a couple of decades. Anthony, with a college degree in architecture and engineering, has a wife, Mariya, and two children, Simon and Erik. For the past four years, he's been a stay-at-home dad. When family moved to the Columbia area for Mariya's job as a physician, he needed a business that would allow him to continue to spend time with his boys, 2 and 6. He started Re-Soil, the first licensed commercial composter in the Columbia area.

"I grew up in New York, where everybody recycled. Here, not so much. But this is a great way to keep organic waste, especially food products, out of the landfill," he said. The entrepreneur explained that 70 percent of the waste that goes into landfills is organic, which translates into millions of tons of material that could be composted.

Anthony bought three acres near Elgin, just 20 minutes from their new home. Now he spends his time on a skid steer, moving and aerating compost. And he couldn't be happier.

"I'm used to working 12 to 14 hours a day. My dad had a pizza parlor in New York, and we were open seven days a week." So the 60 to 80 hours a week he spends at Re-Soil during peak season don't seem so bad. In summer, things slow down a bit.

The concept behind Re-Soil is to keep food and organic material out of landfills. The waste is scientifically developed into high quality compost that is used to renourish the soil.

Re-Soil's 10,000 square-foot building, which Anthony designed and built himself, has a holding area for waste to be dumped. Six large bins, each with a pipe down the center that forces air through the mix, hold the material at different levels of decomposition. Anthony monitors each bin, recording soil temperature and moisture levels, and mixes the material accordingly.

"I can get aerobic decomposition in about 15 days, instead of the anaerobic method which could take three to nine months, depending on weather conditions and luck," he said. The finished compost is stockpiled outside, ready for sale.

Re-Soil accepts any organic waste, but its primary suppliers are Publix, Harvest Hope Food Bank, the State Farmers Market, and several cafeterias, including Blue Cross Blue Shield. Anthony explained that grocery stores have a lot of food waste from the inedible components of produce, like peelings, stems, cores, and leaves. When Harvest Hope sends produce, it's likely to be too rotten for consumption.

One of his primary suppliers is Atlas Organics, a waste hauler. Once the Richland and Lexington schools are back on schedule, he expects to again receive their cafeteria waste.

Re-Soil accepts food and organic waste from almost any source. Acceptable material includes wood chips, chicken litter, and grass clippings, plus many other sources that people might not consider.

Cardboard, unpainted lumber, and cooked meat and fish go right into the mix. While he can't accept raw meat or cooking grease, almost any other food product is welcome.

Anthony also accepts material from timber and landscape companies, who otherwise would pay the landfill to dispose of their waste. "I charge less than the landfill, and it's going to a good use," he said. "It will be used to nourish soil." Re-Soil takes shredded wood and sawdust at no charge.

Compared to other organic garden soil, Re-Soil has more nutrients and greater porosity. The compost sells for $10 for a 1.5 cubic foot bag, or $70 per cubic yard. A pickup truck load of two cubic yards is $140. Wholesale opportunities are also available.

Re-Soil, located at 1692 Brazell Rd. in Elgin, is open Monday through Saturday, but a phone call first is appreciated. Visit resoil.us or call 917-468-3311 for more information.

Agriculture's Rising Tide

Detergents, drywall, pharmaceuticals, shampoo, tires, paper, desks, and baseball bats. While it may sound like a random string of words, there is a common thread: each item is a product of crops harvested right here in South Carolina and exported to consumers worldwide.

International trade has become the norm for many of South Carolina's agricultural operations. About 30 percent of our farm products are exported, helping our balance of trade with our world partners. And it's not just the bulk farm commodities.

Local agribusiness is going global with Internet retailing and improved packaging, as well as access to seven major interstates, three international airports, and public port facilities in Greer, Georgetown and Charleston. Agribusiness is what's trending right now, and the Port of Charleston is right at the epicenter of growth for South Carolina's ag industry.

The Port of Charleston, the fastest growing port in the United States, provides agribusiness an avenue for trade with more than 150 nations worldwide. Its channels were dredged to 45 feet in 2004 to allow larger ships to dock and carry heavy products like grain, poultry and timber from South Carolina to Asia, Europe and other parts of the world.

As larger ships utilize Charleston's deeper channels, containers bringing imports from other continents are now being returned filled with soybeans and other grains, providing farmers a conduit for large-scale exports in what would otherwise be empty containers. Two-directional trade has resulted in a whopping 115 percent increase in South Carolina grain shipments from the Charleston Port during the last year alone.

The Army Corps of Engineers recently gave the green light to deepen the Charleston harbor once again, this time to 52 feet. Upon completion, the port will be able to handle mega-ships with capacities of 14,000 twenty-foot-equivalent units during low or high tide. It's one thing to get my boat stuck at low tide; not so good for one of these 1,100 foot long container ships.

The ability to export and import fresh produce adds enormous value to the trade system. United States Department of Agriculture protocols and regulations are in place to safeguard domestic crops from pests and diseases from other regions of the world. Other countries have import regulations, too. Onsite at the Port of Charleston, SCDA has assigned 14 inspectors to certify the quality and cleanliness of grain produced or shipped out of South Carolina as this grain moves through marketing channels. These certificates, recognized around the world, improve access for the Palmetto state's ag products.

Agribusiness development efforts spearheaded by USDA, SCDA, Clemson University and other agencies have enabled many farmers and landowners to further diversify their customer base, expand agricultural land use options, and attract more international customers. With significant increases in agricultural trade and an expanding workforce, we are on course toward our goal of an agribusiness industry in South Carolina that generates a $50 billion annual economic impact by year 2020.

Vegetable Field Day Set Edisto REC

A Vegetable Field Day will be held at the Edisto Research and Education Center in Blackville on Sept. 22. Registration begins at 8 a.m., followed by an indoor session at 8:15 a.m.

Indoor topics include a sweet potato update by Phil Wadl, Tri-Hishtil grafting facility by Ben Hinson, and pumpkin pathogens by Tony Keinath. The field research tours will include pumpkin and sweet potato variety trials, grafted watermelon rootstock and tolerance to RKN, spider mites in fall watermelons, and NACHURS nutrient applications.

Cold watermelons and lunch will be served. Certified Crop Advisor and Pesticide License credits will be offered. For information or directions call 803-284-3343, ext. 221 or email Gilbert Miller at gmlr@clemson.edu.

Fall Waste Pesticide Collection Dates

SOUTH CAROLINA FFA ASSOCIATION

FFA Plans 'COWs'

Chapter Opportunity Workshops are held each fall to help chapters be more successful for the upcoming year. Last year participation increased to more than 775 FFA members from 65 chapters around the state.

Led by state officers, this year's sessions will concentrate on community support and positively impacting communities and will relate to the FFA's Program of Activities (POA), the backbone of a successful chapter. The POA includes a series of activities designed to encourage members to grow as individuals, work as part of a team and serve others.

COWs will be held at Ashley Ridge High School, Pelion High School, Crestwood High School and Mauldin High School during the month of September.

Agritourism Events

Thames Farm Day

Sept. 17

9 a.m. – 12 p.m.

Come out to the farm and enjoy the cooler weather and shop with local farmers and artisans.

This is a great time to stock up on Farm Fresh products:

pork, chicken, beef, produce, goat cheeses, honey, artisan crafts, pet treats and baked goodies.

Walk around the farm and see some critters.

Bring your coolers.
