Farm Aid Helps South Carolina Farmers Stay Afloat

By Marsha Hewitt Editor, SC Market Bulletin

Last October made history as catastrophic rains dumped more than 20 inches of rain on South Carolina over the span of one weekend. The deluge came at the worst possible time, while farmers were trying to harvest fall crops. Peanuts, soybeans, and cotton were ruined, and the fields did not recover from the flooding in time for farmers to plant fall crops such as winter wheat.

It took months for farmers' fields to dry out.

This time last year Eric McClam of City Roots in Columbia was finishing his fall planting. The family-owned, 3-acre organic farm grows 100 varieties of vegetables, fruits, herbs, flowers and mushrooms, which they sell on site and deliver to restaurants and wholesalers.

"In the space of three or four days, we had 22 inches of rain," Eric said. "There goes your fall crop and a good bit of your annual income." He estimated that his farm's losses were close to $50,000. Even the greenhouses were hit hard. With no electricity, they lost a good portion of microgreens and specialty Agricultural losses statewide were estimated at $587 million, with some farmers facing bankruptcy. South Carolina legislators responded to the needs of the farmers with the Farm Aid Grant program. One year after the flood, farmers are recovering, thanks in part to those grants. The City Roots owner said the money he received allowed him to continue farming. "We wouldn't have closed the doors, but it would have been a hardship. We would have looked at an operating loan," Eric said.

"When we first heard about the program, we were really excited. We're optimists, and we were overjoyed to find some relief financially," he continued.

Eric is using the money to purchase seed, transplants, and fertilizer. The cash flow allowed him to plant a couple of extra acres, which "will get us back to where we were" he which "will get us back to where we were," he said. He added that he was very impressed with how thorough the application process was and how timely the payment was.

This week found him out the in the field on Airport Boulevard as usual, cultivating and prepping crops to be harvested. "We look forward to less extremes this year. We'd like to have a normal, good old year, where it rains once in a while and is not too hot.'

A Year Later

October 4-6, 2015 – days that will live in infamy for South Carolinians. It rained. And it rained. Over 24 inches in some parts of the state. The rain stopped, but the flood had just begun for farmers.

In December, we were hopeful that farmers would hopeful that farmers would get some help by way of the federal budget, the "omnibus spending bill," but there was not a drop to be found. So, our South Carolina legislators got together and drafted House Bill 4717, establishing the Farm Aid Fund. After some challenges, the bill became law on May 24, 2016.

Fast forward to July 1, and we started accepting applications for Farm Aid Grants. Now here we are,

Grants. Now here we are, at the anniversary of the flood, and in less than four months from when the ink dried on the law, we were able to get money back in the hands of South Carolina farmers still trying to dry out following last year's historic event.

It's a privilege for me to share some highlights and insights that we at SCDA gained in helping our farmers through the application process.

Clemson University, South Carolina State University and SCDA conducted 21 farmer meetings around the state in just 20 days. This is just one outstanding example of the collaboration and cooperation that went into this program. Thanks go to some of our farm lending banks who sponsored several meetings with a meal.

During the application period, the S.C. Department of Revenue set up shop at the State Farmers Market in the Consumer Protection Division lab and began the review of the applications. SCDA staff called every farmer who applied and called a second time if additional documentation was required. The two staffs were a very good complement to each other, with technical skills of the Revenue folks and farming expertise by SCDA.

One gentleman came in on the deadline, Aug. 15, to hand-deliver his application while his wife was in labor...

am happy to report there was success on his application and the birth of his child.

I sent a text to one farmer a couple of days after we mailed the checks to ask if he had received his check. He said he "got it on Saturday and spent it on Monday.

We covered over 60 different crops, including 17 organic crops like kiwi, kale and arugula. We even covered clams. Eighty-eight farmers were awarded the maximum grant of $100,000, while the smallest award was $164. The average award came in at $28,365, illustrating the intent of this program to help small to medium sized farms. The applications also confirmed our early estimates of 75 percent crop loss, with crop insurance covering just over one-third of those losses.

I received several nice phone calls and written notes from farmers who received assistance. My response was that the team effort made it all possible.

This process has been challenging both and rewarding. I have never been more proud of the staff at the Department of Agriculture. The legislation was well crafted and served its purpose: Provide a lifeline for farmers, not a bail-out. And even more than that, it is a testament to the value of agriculture and agribusiness in the Palmetto State.
