DeShawn Blanding Elected National FFA Officer

First national officer from S.C. in nearly 50 years

By Marsha Hewitt
Editor
SC Market Bulletin

As a national FFA officer, DeShawn Blanding of Manning is representing South Carolina on an international level. He is the current National FFA Vice President for the Southern Region, a position that allows him almost unlimited opportunities in the agricultural world.

DeShawn's new position has already taken him to Japan, Washington DC, and several other states, with a full year of travel and leadership duties in his future. Being a national officer with FFA is a full-time commitment, which means he is taking a year off from his college studies. A USDA 1890 Land Grant Scholar, DeShawn is studying natural resources engineering at North Carolina A&T State University in Greensboro.

Although he originally planned to go to medical school like his older brother, DeShawn said FFA changed his perspective. Being a generation disconnected from the industry, he realized the opportunities available to him and to other young people in agriculture when he joined FFA as a high school freshman. "I am blessed to have this opportunity," he said. "For our national officer legacy platform, we choose what we want to leave behind. My team and I chose We Are FFA, a platform focused on diversity and inclusion."

One of the most exciting opportunities for the national officers was a recent 10-day visit to Japan, where their mission was to build a relationship with Future Farmers of Japan. They explored Japanese culture, food, and agriculture.

"It's quite different there. A big farm is seven acres, and that will be spread out in several different places," DeShawn explained.

"Mostly they grow vegetables. The farm we visited was very traditional, with mom and dad and the whole family working."

With a land mass about the size of California, Japan supports 12 million people. Only 30 percent of their land is useable, with the rest either in forests or mountains. But even though the population is dense, the Japanese people are proud of their land and take care of it, DeShawn said. "They are environmentally conscious, and they embrace the land. They use every foot of it." He was impressed with the Japanese culture and the food.

In addition to visiting several cities in Japan, the FFA officers also spent time on a modern beef farm, with about 1,000 head of cattle, and a dairy farm, complete with a robotic milking parlor. "Their technology is comparable to ours," DeShawn said. They also visited the American Embassy, where they learned how American imports affect Japan. Much of their food is imported, he said. "As a nation, they are less aware of food, and people are not encouraged to go into farming."

Back in the United States, the group spent a week in Washington, DC, where they learned how to be better advocates for agriculture. Among their numerous meetings each day, they talked with agricultural and education organizations, as well as meeting with Sen. Tim Scott's staff and Sen. Lindsey Graham. "We were encouraged to use our own voices to do more with agriculture," DeShawn said.

After a week in Washington, the group split up. DeShawn's next assignment was in North Dakota to facilitate workshops and deliver keynotes for FFA Week. In March, DeShawn will begin traveling to state FFA conventions – including Hawaii. By the end of the year, DeShawn will have traveled to as many as 35 states to help train local FFA chapters and state officers and tell his FFA story to businesses and on Capitol Hill.

On March 9, DeShawn's home town of Manning is hosting a celebration in his honor. He is, after all, the first national FFA officer from South Carolina in nearly 50 years. DeShawn said he was honored to meet retired Marine Corps Major Gen. Arnold Fields while in Washington. Fields was the state's last New Farmers of America national officer, a youth organization for African-American farm boys studying agriculture.

DeShawn sees a bright future for agriculture. With 649,355 students in FFA, interest in farming is at an all-time high. His goal is to help grow the national FFA membership through diversity. He encourages FFA members to step out of their comfort zone and look for new opportunities to explore.

With an interest in research on soil and water conservation and land utilization, he plans to earn a graduate degree and become an educator on the college level. "I am needed in this field," he said.

Commissioner

A Week for the Blue Jackets of FFA

George Washington was the "father of our country" as well as an inspiration to the FFA. Since 1948, during the week of our first birthday, the agricultural family celebrates National FFA Week and uses the week as an opportunity to advocate for agricultural education and FFA. It's also a time to share with local, state and national audiences what FFA is and the impact it has on members every day.

Last week, nearly 1,000 FFA members from all over South Carolina descended on the State House grounds for Legislative Appreciation Day to meet with their elected officials. It's certainly an impressive sight to see all the students in their "National Blue" corduroy jackets covering the steps of the State House.

While in Columbia, the students discuss important issues with their representatives and senators, and some chapters are recognized in the House chamber. Many of them drop by my office for visits as well. We always take time to give them a tour of the Department and talk about the diverse careers available in the agriculture field. They serve as a great reminder to our legislators of one of the key missions of the Department of Agriculture—to create new opportunities for this industry in the future.

See A Week for the Blue Jackets of FFA, continued on page 8

Nearly 1,000 FFA students from across the state spent Feb. 22 touring the State House and visiting legislators.

AgSouth Farm Credit to give $25,000 to Farmers Markets

AgSouth Farm Credit has set aside $25,000 to help community-based farmers markets promote their markets during 2017. Fifty farmers markets in AgSouth's territory will each receive $500 to help promote their markets, said AgSouth marketing director Christy Smith.

"AgSouth's purpose in awarding these grants is to increase awareness of how choosing to purchase locally produced foods and goods benefits each community's health and economy," Smith said. As part of the Farm Credit System, AgSouth Farm Credit has been providing financial support to farmers for more than a century.

"This is the fifth year we have provided funds to help local markets with their advertising, and we're proud to add our Community Grant Program to a long list of ways we continue to support agriculture," Smith said.

To be eligible for the grant, markets must be in AgSouth's territory, be open at least eight days during a two-month period, and have an average of at least 10 regularly participating vendors, half of which must sell agricultural products.

The grant money must be used to advertise or otherwise promote the market while incorporating AgSouth's name or logo. All grant applications must be completed in full to the association by March 10.

This year we had visits from Gilbert High School, Lexington-Richland 5, Seneca High School, the State FFA officers and students from Clemson University. I enjoy discussing agricultural issues with these students, and it's very promising to see how engaged they are when it comes to talking food and farming. Organizations like FFA and 4-H afford young people unmatched opportunities to grow as leaders in their communities. Once again this year, I had the honor of presenting a proclamation on behalf of our new Governor Henry McMaster naming February 18-25, 2017 as FFA Week in South Carolina.

Agricultural education programs are on the rise in South Carolina. With 110 programs statewide, more than 10,000 middle and high school students gain skills to fill jobs in agribusiness and to succeed in their field of study. Students explore areas such as forestry, natural resources, agriculture mechanics, horticulture, animal science, biosystems technology, aquaculture and more.

Throughout the year, the FFA mission is embodied in classrooms across the state and nation where students have the chance to learn by doing and are encouraged to look for new solutions to old problems. Agricultural education instructors do an outstanding job of blending hands-on learning with life skills that can be applied to any situation – not just on the farm.

When students enroll in an ag class, one of the first things they learn is the FFA Creed. At just five sentences long, the Creed highlights important traits of a successful leader including perseverance, honesty and dedication to community. It also serves as a blueprint for FFA members in their quest to become agricultural leaders. Written by Erwin Milton Tiffany in 1930, the words of the FFA Creed still serve as a guide for aspiring agriculturalists some 87 years later.

E.M. Tiffany certainly had a vision when he drafted those verses, beginning each with "I believe." I challenge FFA students and advocates for agriculture to believe in the strength and opportunities that lie within the agriculture industry. Thanks to leadership development programs like FFA and 4H, our agricultural future is in good hands.

Peanut Growers Face Strong Demand

From Southeast Farm Press magazine

The global market needs peanuts, one market expert told more than 400 growers at the annual South Carolina Peanut Growers Meeting.

Nationally, peanut warehouses are expanding and shelling companies are upgrading to increase output as market demand has exceeded supply, said Tyron Spearman, editor of the Peanut Farm Market News and executive director of the National Peanut Buying Points Association.

"That is a grower's market. We need more peanuts," Spearman told a standing-room-only crowd. "You are fixing to see a miracle year for peanuts, I think."

Peanut usage jumped 27 percent last year on strong demand for peanut butter and candy, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture figures. Record-high exports of U.S. peanuts are expected to continue and U.S. supply should decline 7 percent to around 3.8 million tons, said Clemson Extension agricultural economist Nathan Smith. A tighter supply will help prices improve to $425 to $500 per ton depending on type.

The continuation of exports to Asia, in addition to Europe and other destinations, will be key for 2017 prices, Smith said. U.S. peanuts have found opportunities in global markets, said Dell Cotton, manager of the Peanut Growers Cooperative Marketing Association.

Cotton stressed the importance of global trade to the nation's agricultural industry. Nearly 75 percent of the nation's peanut crop is exported, and China is a major importer of U.S. peanuts. From January through October, nearly 41 percent of U.S. peanut exports were shipped to China.

"We cannot afford to lose any of these markets," Cotton told the packed room. "China is a very important market to us. Make sure you tell our leaders how important trade is to our profession."

In the United States, overall peanut consumption is up 3.3 percent. "Peanut consumption is growing faster than overall population, so people are eating more peanuts," said Keegan Treadaway, marketing specialist with the National Peanut Board.

Agritourism Event

Clay Talks
March 4 1--3 p.m.

Come out to Myersart Studio and Farm on Saturday from 1-3 p.m. and join us for Clay Talks. Join Jan in making dogwood pins with impressions from the real flowers. The pear and plum trees are blooming at the farm. The frogs are singing at the pond, the birds are building their nests, and maple trees are budding. Come and sit outside and enjoy Spring with us.

Myersart Pottery & Farm • 1281 Legion Road • Hickory Grove

For more information contact John at 803-925-2274 or myersart@bellsouth.net www.myersart.net
