Outlook for Crops Much Better This Year

Passing of Hurricane Irma brought sighs of relief to farmers

By Marsha Hewitt
Editor, SC Market Bulletin

The rains came, the wind howled, gusts blew, and people covered in their houses as Hurricane Irma ripped into Florida. After taking precautions for the oncoming hurricane, residents waited, and waited...and then the sun came out.

Hurricanes are rare but dreaded forces of nature. South Carolina has seen its share in the past 50 years; effects of Hurricane Hugo still linger from 1989. Last year, Hurricane Matthew blew into the state and destroyed many of the crops. In 2015, climatologists told us a big rain was coming, but no one was prepared for what really happened. A flood of Biblical proportions put farms under water, reminding some folks of Noah and the ark. Crops, bountiful and almost ready to harvest, were devastated.

But this year, most residents were prepared. As Hurricane Irma headed west, forecasters put her track through the middle of Florida into South Carolina. Emergency management teams were ready as the state expected the worst, and prayed for the best. The storm obliged by changing track and weakening.

Finally, it looks as if South Carolina farmers are getting a break. The hurricane actually helped some portions of agriculture.

"We were all very anxious and emotional, because you couldn't tell where it was going," said Doug Baldwin, regional credit manager for

AgSouth in the Midlands. "It looked like it might hit Savannah and Hilton Head, which put us in the corridor. Thank goodness, it went west."

He had reports of 6 to 7 inches of rain in areas of the Midlands and Lowcountry, plus significant wind. Gusts of up to 54 mph in Orangeburg twisted some cotton. "We really won't know until the pickers are in the field, just how much cotton they'll get," Baldwin said.

Fortunately there was no damage to peanuts and soybeans in the lower portion of the state. About 95 percent of the corn had already been harvested, and the crop looks good, according to experts. As to other crops, the potential is excellent, Baldwin said.

Will Peeler, regional credit administrator for AgSouth in the Upstate, said farmers in the upper part of the state came through the storm with few problems.

"We checked around. There was a good bit of rain and a little wind, but nothing did major damage," he said. "Beans were not blown over; the cotton got a little wet, which may affect some final volume, but on the whole, it was a strong, regular old storm."

Asked about the crops, he replied, "Soybeans look really good. They needed some rain, so it was a welcome rain. Most of the corn was already up. Cotton is okay. It twisted some, but most will straighten out with sunshine."

The poultry farmers didn't report any roofs off, and no cows blew away, he joked. "Things are looking good for agriculture in general," Peeler concluded.

Thinking Outside the Box, Farming Inside the Box

Innovative farmers are approaching land scarcity, water management and sustainable farming in a new way. With techniques under the general description of controlled environment agriculture, such as indoor farming, hydroponics, vertical farming and aeroponics, it is now possible to grow lettuces, hearty greens, and herbs year-round.

One of the latest innovations has been the "re-purposed" shipping container farm, with several companies, including Tiger Corner Farms here in South Carolina, that are developing models to ship across the country.

A few of our college campuses are embracing the new aeroponics technology. The University of South Carolina's food and beverage service has purchased a container farm from Freight Farms in Massachusetts for the USC campus, with plans to harvest next spring. According to Scott Warner, sustainability manager for Aramark at USC, students will help to manage and grow the crops.

The Citadel purchased two container farms from South Carolina's first locally owned and operated aeroponics container farm manufacturer, Tiger Corner Farms in Summerville. These farms will be run by cadets as part of a sustainability and environmental studies minor throughout the school year.

The Box

What exactly is aeroponics? Some call it an offset of hydroponics, since both farming techniques bypass growing in soil. Hydroponics submerges a plant in a nutrient-rich medium, and the plants are either grown in containers of nutrient solution, or the solution is circulated past the roots. Aeroponic plants are grown in specially designed upright panels with their roots suspended in air. Their environment is controlled by mist sprayers which deliver water and nutrients.

In a time when good land at an affordable price may become even more scarce, the team at Tiger Corner has collaborated to start a vertical farming movement. They are on the fast track to pave the path for these container farm operations across the state. These young folks are intent on creating a better future for current and prospective farmers. Using less than 10 gallons of water a day, an aeroponics container farm can yield the equivalent of 4 acres of land in just 320 square feet of space!

The general manager Stefanie Swackhamer is instantly likeable, and her passion for her community, especially children, is palpable. We discussed the future of Tiger Corner, and with her as the leader, we know great things are coming for Summerville and the surrounding areas. The farm uses upcycled and local materials to manufacture container farms.

Tiger Corner Farm is already giving back to the community in many ways, donating to the local aquarium, engaging with Low Country Local First's New Farmers Program, and supplying a local school district with head lettuces this fall to test the feasibility of using these container farms in a Farm to School program.

With the potential for year-round, healthy, locally grown produce, we are excited about the prospects of South Carolina container farms. Tiger Corner and their commitment to improving our state, USC's Aramark sustainability program and their future campus farm, and The Citadel's on-site container farms are examples to watch closely.

Maybe this outside-the-box thinking and inside-the-box farming will inspire other farmers in South Carolina to take a closer look at diversifying their operations.

Hemp deadline extended until Friday

Due to Hurricane Irma's threat to South Carolina, the deadline to participate in the Industrial Hemp Pilot Program has been extended. All applications must be completed and postmarked by 5 p.m. on Sept. 22.

The S.C. Industrial Hemp Pilot Program allows 20 farmers to grow up to 20 acres of hemp in 2018. Farmers selected to participate will represent all growing areas of the state.

For additional information pertaining to the Hemp Pilot Program, visit the S.C. Department of Agriculture's webpage, agriculture.sc.gov.

Learn How to Expand Food into International Markets

The Southern United States Trade Association and the S.C. Department of Agriculture are offering a free half day seminar so that producers can learn the basics of exporting U.S. food and agriculture products.

Participants will hear from a network of speakers on how to export food, as well as SUSTA's 50 percent reimbursement of international marketing.

Topics include:

- USDA Programs to Reduce International Marketing Budget
- Export Readiness
- How to Connect with Foreign Distributors
- How to Finance and Protect Your International Transactions
- Shipping Across International Borders

Trade association personnel will be available to consult one-on-one with companies about SUSTA's Global Events and CostShare Programs. SUSTA staff will be available to meet one-on-one prior to the seminar. Call or email to schedule an appointment.

The seminar will be held Oct. 19 at the French Quarter Inn in Charleston, beginning at 9 a.m. To register or for more information, contact Missie Lindsey at 504-569-5986, Missie@susta.org, or Laura Lester at 803-734-2211, llester@scda.sc.gov.

Featuring Certified SC Products

Thai Crunch Salad

Total Time: 30 minutes • Servings: 4

Thai Peanut Dressing

- ¼ cup creamy peanut butter
- 2 Tb. unseasoned rice vinegar
- 2 Tb. fresh lime juice, from one lime
- 3 Tb. vegetable oil
- 1 Tb. soy sauce (use gluten-free if needed)
- 2 Tb. honey
- 2 ½ Tb. sugar
- 2 garlic cloves, roughly chopped
- 1 inch square piece fresh ginger, peeled and roughly chopped
- 1 tsp. salt
- ¼ tsp. crushed red pepper flakes
- 2 Tb. fresh cilantro leaves

For the dressing, combine all of the ingredients, except the cilantro, in a blender and process until completely smooth. Add the cilantro and blend for a few seconds until the cilantro is finely chopped. Refrigerate until ready to serve.

Salad

- ½ cup gourmet cocktail peanuts
- 4 cups chopped Napa cabbage or shredded coleslaw mix
- 1 cup prepared shredded carrots
- 1 red bell pepper, thinly sliced into bite-sized pieces
- 1 small English cucumber, halved lengthwise, seeded, thinly sliced
- 1 cup cooked and shelled edamame
- 2 medium scallions, thinly sliced
- ½ cup loosely packed chopped fresh cilantro

Combine all of the ingredients in a large bowl and toss to combine. If serving right away, drizzle the peanut dressing over top and toss; otherwise, serve the dressing on the side so the salad doesn't get soggy. Peanuts can be sprinkled on the salad when it is served.

Midlands Farm Tour Rescheduled

The new date for the 2017 Sustainable Midlands Farm Tour is Sept. 23, from 11 a.m.-6 p.m.

The 10 participating farms have worked hard to plan tours and demonstrations that offer participants the chance to learn about sustainable agriculture, farm stewardship, and animal care. Plus, attendees will be able to purchase fresh, local goods from each farm. They will even be able to order their Thanksgiving turkeys!

This event is ticketed ($15) but is free for kids under 10, and those that are WIC/SNAP/EBT beneficiaries, and those with Senior Vouchers. Discounted ticket prices of $10 are offered for first responders, military, and students with ID.

The event was rescheduled due to Hurricane Irma. For more information about specific offerings at each location, call 803-767-7146.
