Young farmer represents the new face of ag

By Marsha Hewitt

Nat Bradford represents the new face of farming. Despite the fact that his agricultural roots go way back, he is embracing one of the country's newest crops—hemp—in an effort to combine the old ways with the new.

This young Sumter County farmer is all about sustainable farming, letting his land be governed by nature rather than chemicals. By using proven methods that go back hundreds of years, Nat is improving the soil for his new crop before it's even planted.

Nat's vegetables have already made a name for themselves among the top chefs in the state. His collards, which are grown from heirloom seed, have a different growing pattern—and vastly different flavor—than commercial collards. Every bit of the plant is tender and tasty; even the stems are soft and sweet.

"This the part you usually throw away," he said, snapping a stem from a young plant. "But these stems are edible, so you're getting full value." He added that the leaves act as solar panels, converting the sun's energy into sugar. His collards branch out, rather than up, so they are sweet throughout.

& seed

Similarly, Bradford Watermelons are distinctly flavorful. His family has been growing heirloom Bradford melons from seeds his great-grandfather handed down from the 1800s. Farming doesn't get much more sustainable than that. "Our goal is to bring back the historical heirloom food that shaped the food ways of South Carolina," he said. The family is also known for its okra.

Nat came to the hemp project in a round-about way. After being told by a high school ag teacher years ago that there was no future in farming, he earned a degree in landscape architecture from Clemson University. Even in the landscape business, Nat had used native and indigenous plants, reasoning that they needed less water and fewer chemicals than non-native plants.

He ran a successful landscape design firm in Seneca for about 20 years, but the lure of the family farm called him home. The opportunity to return to his homestead offered him a chance to do things his own way, incorporating centuries-old practices that enhance the soil.

"I always loved ag. As a kid I sold watermelons out of my dad's office," he reminisced.

Nat's interest in hemp is different from that of most of the other 19 farmers who have been approved to grow this trial crop in South Carolina. After doing some research on hemp while in college, he was fascinated with its potential. "I said if it ever became legal, I'd be the first one to grow it. It's such an amazing plant."

The enterprising young farmer has set aside one acre to do research on six strains of hemp. The other 19 acres will be under irrigation, similar to high-yield corn. He is preparing the beds now so he can plant directly into rye mulch, which should reduce weeds and retain moisture.

Nat's goal is to harvest the hemp seed and process it into high-quality cooking oil. By co-branding the cold pressed hemp seed oil with specialty food entrepreneur Clay Oliver, Nat can take advantage of an established distribution system for artisan oils. The residue from the seed will be pressed into protein cakes, similar to soybean oil and soybean meal.

Now, he's concentrating on finding hemp seed—Romania seems to be a good source, he said, adding that he will ultimately save his own seed. He plans to plant in mid-May and hopes to harvest the grain in July or August, using an old sickle-bar harvester.

"That will take the tops off and leave the stalks. We'll lay them down and crimp them to use as mulch, which will improve the soil health," he explained. "The sooner we get it to market, the better chance we have of a gaining a foothold in South Carolina."

Nat will be happy with a minimum yield of 800 pounds of grain per acre, but no one knows exactly what to expect from this untried crop. By saving some of the seed, he is also looking to become a source for domestically grown hemp seed.

"Our goal is to have the product ready in September or October," he said optimistically. "We'll be one of the first in South Carolina to have hemp seed oil on the market."

In DC to help SC

Every now and again, I leave South Carolina in order to serve South Carolina. Now before you take that the wrong way, let me clarify that even this South Carolina-loving farmer understands that when important agriculture discussions that could impact our state are taking place in Washington, DC, I'd better make every effort to be there.

Several weeks ago I attended the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture (NASDA) 2018 Winter Policy Conference, where the hot topics of discussion included the 2018 Farm Bill, the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and the Food Safety Modernization Act (FSMA). Another critical issue on the agenda was broadband access for rural America. While at the conference, I helped lead a discussion at the White House called Achieving e-Connectivity for Rural America.

Our conversation focused on the Precision Agriculture Connectivity Act of 2018, which was introduced in congress in January. This legislation requires the Federal Communications Commission to establish a task force for meeting the connectivity and technology needs of precision agriculture in United States. The task force would identify and measure current gaps in broadband coverage and develop policy recommendations for expanded deployment of fixed and mobile high-speed broadband.

In DC to help SC

Farmers in rural South Carolina often tell me that they don't even have decent cell phone coverage in their communities, let alone high-speed broadband. As many rural routes that I travel around the state, I can attest to that. Whether long-timers or new and emerging farmers, the message tends to be the same: we can't advance in today's market without using today's technology. And usage starts with access to high-speed data platforms.

Precision agriculture technologies and practices allow farmers to significantly increase crop yields, eliminate overlap in operations, and reduce inputs such as seed, fertilizer, pesticides, water, and fuel. These technologies allow farmers to collect real time data about their fields, automate field management, and maximize resources. The goal is to achieve service on 95 percent of croplands and ranchlands in the United States by 2025. Studies estimate that precision agriculture technologies can reduce agricultural operation costs by up to $25 per acre and increase farm yields by up to 70 percent by 2050.

Speaking of precision agriculture, last year we bought a new, rather expensive, computer for our farm – more specifically for the seed planter than we use on the farm. It will let us adjust the planting of seed based on the nutrient profile of the soil. I hope it won't take too long for bushels added or seed saved to pay for it.

About Washington, I'm always glad to get home after a trip to DC. As Senator Tim Scott has said before, the more you're in DC, the more you like SC. It was a good use of time, however, especially when I can bring news of potential progress for our farmers. Stay tuned for updates on the Precision Agriculture Connectivity Act, the Farm Bill, and other important issues in Congress.

South Carolina Peanut Growers Seek National Peanut Board Nominees

The South Carolina Peanut Board is seeking eligible peanut producers who are interested in serving on the National Peanut Board.

The board will hold a nominations election to select two nominees each for member and alternate to the National Peanut Board during a meeting on March 14 at 11 a.m. at Clark's Restaurant in Santee.

All eligible peanut producers are encouraged to participate. Eligible producers are those who are engaged in the production and sale of peanuts and who own or share the ownership and risk of loss of the crop.

Bud Bowers of Estill is the state's current National Peanut Board member and Neal Baxley of Marion serves as the alternate. Their terms expired Dec. 31, 2017.

USDA requires two nominees from each state for each position of member and alternate. The National Peanut Board will submit South Carolina's slate of nominees to the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, who makes the appointments.

The National Peanut Board encourages everyone who qualifies as a peanut producer to attend the meeting and run for nomination. It is USDA's policy that membership on industry-government boards and committees accurately reflect the diversity of individuals served by the programs.

The South Carolina Peanut Board consists of seven board members whose purpose is to increase consumption and awareness of peanuts grown in South Carolina.

The National Peanut Board represents all US peanut farmers and their families. Its mission is to provide growers with a growing market for peanuts and the information and tools for improved efficiencies. Through research and marketing initiatives, the board is finding new ways to enhance production and increase consumer demand by promoting the great taste, nutrition and culinary versatility of USA-grown peanuts.

Apply for Conservation Stewardship Program by March 2

USDA's Natural Resources Conservation Service helps landowners build their business while implementing conservation practices that help ensure the sustainability of their operation.

Through CSP, farmers and land owners earn payments for managing, maintaining, and expanding conservation activities like cover crops, ecologically-based pest management, buffer strips, and pollinator and beneficial insect habitat -- all while maintaining production on their land. Applications must be received by March 2 for this funding period.

CSP also encourages the adoption of cutting-edge technologies and new management techniques such as precision agriculture applications, on-site carbon storage and planting for high carbon sequestration rate, and new soil amendments to improve water quality.

Some of the benefits of CSP include:

- Improved cattle gains per acre;
- Increased crop yields;
- Wildlife population improvements;
- Better resilience to weather extremes.

NRCS has made several updates to the program to help producers better evaluate their conservation options and the benefits to their operations. New methods and software for evaluating applications help producers see up front why they are or are not meeting stewardship thresholds, and allow them to pick practices that work for their objectives.

These tools also enable producers to see potential payment scenarios for conservation early in the process. Producers should contact their local USDA service center or visit www.nrcs.usda.gov/GetStarted.

Household Hazardous Materials and Pesticides to be Collected to be in York

YORK—The SC Department of Agriculture and York County will hold a household hazardous materials and pesticide collection on March 3 from 8 a.m. until noon at York County Public Works, 220 Public Works Rd. (off Hwy 5) near the Moss Justice Center.

The collection of household materials is for York County residents only. Pesticides can be brought by residents in or outside of the county. Business waste products will not be accepted.

Materials should be transported in sturdy boxes with newspapers stuffed between containers to prevent spills. Products should be in their original containers. A hazardous materials company will be on site to dispose of the materials. Workers will be on hand to unload vehicles.

For additional information contact SCDA's John Stokes at 803-737-9696 or jstokes@scda.sc.gov.

Growing hemp is new venture for SC agriculture

In 2017, the SC General Assembly approved a pilot program for a limited number of farmers in the state to grow hemp. As mandated by the new law, the SC Department of Agriculture chose 20 growers from more than 130 applicants.

SC Commissioner of Agriculture Hugh Weathers explained that the selected growers are from all over the state, from the Upstate regions of Oconee and Anderson, through the Midlands, and down to Horry County. Each farmer is limited to 20 acres of hemp.

"We want to see how the crop functions in different soil types and different areas. We stress the diversity of agriculture in this state, and we want to see how hemp blends in," he said.

In addition to background checks, each farmer had to have a letter of support from one of the five research universities in the state: Clemson, South Carolina State, the University of South Carolina, USC-Beaufort and MUSC.

The top five end uses for South Carolina farmers' hemp crop are:

- Cannabidiol (CBD) oil
- Cloning
- Fiber
- Seed to sell
- Seed stock

"This is a new industry for South Carolina, and we're hopeful that these first 20 growers will lay a strong foundation for an expanded 2019 program," said Weathers. "Ultimately it's about growth and expansion for our farmers and our economy."

SCDA Hosts Meetings about Food Hubs

On March 5, join SCDA and local food system leaders across the state for a workshop and conversations about food hubs in South Carolina.

The keynote speaker will be Gary Matteson, of the Farm Credit Council and vice president of Young, Beginning and Small Farmers programs. Presenters will be Jim Matson of Matson Consulting in Aiken and Jim Barham, agriculture economist with USDA Rural Development.

The program will run from 9:30 a.m. - 5:30 p.m. at the Phillips Center at the State Farmers Market.

On March 6, the department will continue the conversation about food hubs specific to the Midlands region. That session will be held at Central Midlands Council of Governments, 236 Stoneridge Drive in Columbia from 9:30 a.m. - 12:30 p.m.

For more information on either meeting contact Susan Carson Lambert at scdgeographer@gmail.com or 803-550-9591.
