IT'S TIME FOR THE SC AGRIBIZ & FARM EXPO

FLORENCE – Everyone interested in agriculture is invited to the SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo on January 23 and 24 at the Florence Center. With free admission and a diverse array of offerings, the event will appeal to farmers and consumers, said Expo manager Jody Martin.

“Education is a primary goal of the SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo. Programs are designed to give farmers the tools they need to grow better crops and make a profit,” Martin said.

The Expo will offer two general sessions and four educational tracks. The tracks are field crops, fruits and vegetables, livestock and women in agriculture. Topics include growing industrial hemp in South Carolina, maximizing corn and soybean yields, trade, tariffs, the farm bill, and livestock and fruit and vegetable production.

said there are many other reasons to attend the expo. A highlight will again be the Taste of South Carolina, a ticketed event set for Wednesday evening. Come hungry for delicious food prepared by Dupre Percival of Dupre Catering, and grown by several Certified SC Grown Roots farmers, including Lowcountry Creamery, Freshly Grown Farms, and McLeod Farms.

The event, sponsored by AgSouth Farm Credit and Certified SC Grown, showcases key agribusiness companies, leaders, award winners, and advocates. Tickets are $25 each, via tasteofsc.eventbrite.com.

On Wednesday, the doors open at 8 am for the free Ag Appreciation Breakfast and the opportunity to "Celebrate Agriculture" with Michele Payn of Cause Matters Corporation. The trade show floor opens at 10 am.

New for 2019 are Lunch 'n Learn sessions where timely topics will be discussed during the lunch break. More than 100 exhibitors of farm equipment, supplies and services will be available to talk with the public about the latest technologies in agriculture.

Along with the educational offerings, Martin

SC Commissioner of Agriculture Hugh Weathers said he is looking forward to the expo again this year.

“On behalf of the South Carolina Department of Agriculture, welcome to the 2019 SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo. This expo has become a start-of-the-New Year tradition for the agriculture community in South Carolina, and this 2019 event promises to be the greatest yet as it showcases the very best of tradition and innovation in our industry,” he said.

“I hope you’ll take advantage of all the Expo has to offer, from educational sessions to networking opportunities, and please be sure to visit the Department of Agriculture booth. We look forward to sharing our exciting 2019 plans for growing and strengthening agriculture and agribusiness in South Carolina.”

More information on all educational sessions, speaker biographies and other expo details are available at scagribizexpo.com. Register on Eventbrite or contact Miriam Pflug at miriam@scagribizexpo.com.

NEW OPPORTUNITIES

With the coming of each New Year, a sense of optimism abounds. Some of us make resolutions that motivate us to do better—if we stick to them. What will 2019 bring? What opportunities and challenges are out there for our farmers?

One thing I’ve noticed is that some people can have the mistaken idea that farmers don’t do much work in the winter. Tell that to a livestock farmer and I believe you’d get a quick education. For all farmers, though, I beg to differ; January and February are when we do most of our planning for the coming year. We do endless amounts of paperwork for our accountants and bankers, get our equipment ready for spring planting, attend auctions, buy essential tools, and get psyched up for another year.

An important part of farming is comparing notes with fellow ag professionals. Farmers learn a lot from other farmers, especially in their neighborhoods. What may look like a casual encounter with a neighbor is actually an exchange of vital information. Go to any farmer meeting and just watch the conversations in the hallway. After they get done with politics and the weather, the subject always turns to something about farming practices and the results. I used to do it all the time at dairy meetings.

The off-season of winter is also a time to do soil testing, talk to your county agent, meet with salesmen to let them talk about the latest and greatest product. One of the most critical things that all farmers have to do this time of year is cash flow projecting. With where our markets are now, it is very important to see how the year looks on paper first before deciding what seed to buy.

In January a lot of the commodity boards have their annual meetings, which can greatly influence farmers’ decisions for the year. Our SCDA commodity specialists go to great efforts to put together the latest information that can benefit our farmers.

PREPARE FOR SEVERE WEATHER

Winter weather in South Carolina can range from balmy temperatures to major ice storms. To help people be prepared for any emergency, the SC Emergency Management Division has printed a Severe Winter Weather guide.

Winter storms can damage property, create safety risks, destroy crops and timber, and damage infrastructures such as power lines, roads, and bridges.

During the cold winter months, local fire departments see an increase in the number of fires and fatalities, some of which are caused by carbon monoxide poisoning. If you lose electricity, use extra caution when using gas heaters, fireplaces and candles. Never use portable generators indoors.

BEFORE A STORM:

To minimize the inconvenience caused by winter storms, be prepared at all times. Have sufficient fuel for your vehicle and heating fuel (if you use it) for your home.

Insulate pipes with insulation, or newspapers and plastic, to avoid freezing.

MARKET BULLETIN

Learn how to shut off water valves in case a pipe bursts. Place a winter emergency kit in each vehicle. It should include a shovel, flashlight, water, snack food, matches, first aid kit, extra clothing, and a blanket.

Stock up on non-perishable food items and water—enough for at least three days. Don't bother buying bread and milk, which are perishable. Instead select canned goods, and keep a manual can opener where you can find it.

Have plenty of batteries for lanterns and flashlights. Buy candles and matches and store them where they are easily accessible.

Fill outdoor livestock watering tanks. Make a plan for getting water and food to pets and livestock. Outdoor animals need extra feed to stay warm, and they must have plenty of unfrozen water. If your pipes and hoses freeze, be prepared to either carry water to your animals or thaw out water tanks. Provide shelter for your animals to keep them from getting wet and chilled. Have enough feed available for several days, because you may not be able to leave your home if the storm is severe.

DURING THE STORM:

Stay indoors if possible. If you must go out, dress in layers of lightweight clothing. Wear waterproof boots or shoes to keep your feet dry.

Keep dry. Wet clothing loses its insulating value and you can become chilled very quickly if you are wet.

Drive only if absolutely necessary. Don't travel alone, and let others know your schedule. Remember that cell phones may not work during outages.

If you are in an accident on the highway, or are trapped in your vehicle, remain inside with your hazard lights on. Rescuers will find a vehicle much quicker than a person walking. If you are in your car for a long period, run the engine and heater for about 10 minutes every hour. Open a window slightly to avoid possible carbon monoxide poisoning.

Avoid fallen power lines. They are extremely dangerous and should be approached only by professionals. Treat every line as if it were a live wire.

AFTER THE STORM:

Listen to your local radio and television station—or your phone—for weather, traffic, and updates.

Check on your animals to make sure they have adequate food and water.

Go to a local shelter if you are without heat during extreme cold.

NEW OPPORTUNITIES

And that's just in January! I will attend as many of these events as possible, but since some of them overlap, I probably will have to miss one or two. For details on these meetings, check with our marketing staff in the office or visit the appropriate website for your group.

February is not quite as packed, but we look forward to the Southeastern Wildlife Expo in Charleston on February 15-17. This eagerly anticipated event, which can attract more than 40,000 people, allows us to showcase locally grown food and SC Certified Products. And before that we have the SC Peach Association Quarterly meeting on February 4 and 5.

Looking ahead a bit further, we will have a labor forum, FFA Week, and our annual Commissioner's Cup Barbecue coming up soon. In fact, we have events scheduled for every month of the year, and all of them have farmers and consumers in mind. It's shaping up to be a busy winter!

Let me say it's hard to realize that we've actually reached 2019, but we have. And with that, I wish for all of you a happy and prosperous New Year!

CORNER OF SC HAD 123 INCHES OF RAIN

Greer – The northwestern corner of South Carolina appears to be a record for rainfall in the state. The National Weather Service reported that the Walhalla State Fish Hatchery near Lake Jocassee had 123 inches (312 centimeters) of rain in 2018. The state climatologist office says the previous record was 119 inches (302 centimeters) of rain at Hogback Mountain near Landrum.

Assistant state climatologist Melissa Griffin said a federal committee will review the information on the Walhalla State Fish Hatchery and could declare it a record. The mountains are usually the rainiest part of South Carolina, with an average of about 75 inches (190 centimeters) per year.
