7 INNOVATIVE FARMERS GET ACRE FUNDING

BY JEREMY WARD, ACRE COORDINATOR

They say a tree is only as strong as its roots — and through the Agribusiness Center for Research and Entrepreneurship (ACRE), the SC Department of Agriculture is working to strengthen our state’s agricultural economy from the bottom up. ACRE recently announced the seven awardees who will participate in this year’s Entrepreneurship Program.

These seven agricultural entrepreneurs hail from every region of the state, and are all innovative, visionary and dedicated. Each is eligible to receive up to $25,000 in funding from ACRE, but the amount varies with the business.

ACRE Executive Director Kyle Player praised the enthusiasm and passion of the entrepreneurs selected.

“We had 36 applicants to this program, all of whom were qualified and impressive,” Player said. “I’m convinced that these seven will make a real impact on our state, and we are truly excited to begin working with them.”

Launched in early 2018, ACRE provides grants, research support and other services to help expand economic opportunities for South Carolina agriculture. The Entrepreneurship Program will help position these businesses in the marketplace through mentoring, networking, and funding.

JOSH EBOCH BARRIER ISLAND OYSTER CO.

Barrier Island Oyster Co., the first floating oyster farm in Charleston County, has a two-pronged goal: promoting marine conservation and cultivating superior oysters. Spawned in hatcheries, the oysters grow in a mesh cage in Lowcountry waters until they have reached the ideal size. At that point, the oysters — which the company dubs “Sea Clouds” — are sold to local restaurants and raw bars, where they are a hot commodity.

Eboch and his business partner, Jared Hulteen, plan to use the ACRE funds for equipment to add a third prong to their business: agritourism. “Our oyster farm tours,” explains Eboch, will be “a fantastic way to advertise our products and introduce hundreds — even thousands — of potential consumers to the farming process.”

JARED JESTER HERITAGE PEANUT COMPANY

South Carolina is the only state to officially recognize the boiled peanut, and Jared Jester is looking to capitalize on our beloved state snack.

“Through this unique connection,” Jester says, “our company can help this state differentiate itself from other states throughout the nation.”

Jester heads up the Heritage Peanut Company, a new business that is packaging and selling a line of boiled peanut hummus and pre-cooked, frozen boiled peanuts. He is partnered in this venture with Corrin Bowers, a peanut farmer from Estill, SC, in order to provide the highest quality South Carolina-grown peanuts to consumers.

Needless to say, Jester is very excited about the growth of his business. “We’re applying modern technology,” he says, “to an already-proven product in the boiled peanut, in a state that is already synonymous with that product.” He plans to use his ACRE funds for a variety of purposes, including equipment lease, marketing, and labeling.

SC boiled peanuts are “an already-proven product,” says Jared Jester.

STEVE LORCH TABLE ROCK TEA COMPANY

Steve Lorch has ambitious goals for tea farming in upstate South Carolina — turning this region into “tea country,” similar to how Napa Valley is known for wine. Located in the shadow of Table Rock State Park, Lorch is accomplishing this goal by pioneering the resurgent U.S. tea industry.

“We are one of just a handful of tea growers in the continental United States,” explains Lorch, “and our trademark slogan is actually ‘uniquely American tea.’ Instead of trying to recreate Chinese or Indian or Kenyan tea farms, we are playing to the strengths of the United States and, in particular, the Appalachian region where we are located.”

Through careful breeding, construction of several greenhouses, and establishment of a tea growers’ consortium, Lorch is primed to expand his business into new acreage and fresh markets. He plans to use the grant funding to buy a bagging machine in order to do just that.

As he works to grow the business, Lorch says that he hopes “to generate more awareness of this specialty crop in South Carolina,” and to “provide the expertise to anyone interested in starting.”

BOOTS ON THE GROUND

I went to Texas last month and came back with a new pair of cowboy boots — and some information for South Carolina farmers.

This year’s meeting of the Southern Association of State Departments of Agriculture (SASDA) was held in Fort Worth, Texas, and Assistant Commissioners Clint Leach and Aaron Wood joined me there to talk policy and enjoy some Texas-sized hospitality. In fact, the theme of the conference was “Leave Your Suits, Bring Your Boots.”

SASDA represents 14 Southern U.S. states, plus Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. Farmers across this region share a lot of the same concerns, and my colleagues and I got a chance to hear from federal officials and industry experts on some of those issues.

The Waters of the United States rule, or WOTUS, has been a concern of farmers. We were pleased when the Trump administration decided to suspend and revisit this rule with the agricultural community in mind, and in Texas we got a chance to hear from the EPA Regional Administrator from Atlanta about how the revised rule might work.

We also talked about the future of NAFTA and other trade agreements, and the Chinese general consul explained his view of agricultural trade with U.S. farmers. Open dialogue is necessary, but he definitely was presenting the Chinese view of things.

We received an update on the federal Farm to School program. This grant helps fund South Carolina’s own Farm to School program, scfarmtoinstitution.com, which helps promote agriculture education and get fresh foods into schools.

And Texas’ Department of Agriculture talked a bit about their Farm Fresh program, which tries to raise awareness of agriculture and improve Texans’ health. Of course, here in South Carolina, we’ve seen a lot of success with our Certified SC Grown and Fresh on the Menu programs.

In the business session, we addressed the uncertainty that surrounds the industrial hemp regulations. We passed a resolution to urge the FDA to get some clarity to the industry as soon as possible.

The meeting wasn’t all business. The assistant commissioners and I also got to tour AT&T Stadium, where the Dallas Cowboys play. That’s quite a facility that the locals call “Jerry World” after the Cowboys’ owner, Jerry Jones.

I hope to visit the Lone Star State again, but I’m always happy to get back to South Carolina.

JASON THOMAS SOW

One of the more unique agribusiness start-ups in our state is Sow, described by founder Jason Thomas is “an online marketplace for direct transactions between small farmers and the people in their communities.” Through this company, Thomas believes he can revolutionize the way local farms sell their products.

Sow’s main components are secure food boxes that can be placed in any urban location and an inventory app for both consumers and farmers. In a matter of seconds, anyone can check what products are available in the closest box to them, and farmers can just as easily track the sale of their goods.

“We’re shining a light on the rich agricultural history that is the lifeblood of South Carolina’s culture,” declares Thomas, “and giving people the opportunity to know their farmers, just like their grandparents did.” With the ACRE funding, Thomas plans to further develop the software behind the business and expand into new cities in the state.

DEBBIE WEBSTER WHISPERING PINES FARM

Located in Pickens County, Whispering Pines Farm boasts the prestigious claim of being the only sheep dairy in the state. Owner Debbie Webster makes several delicious types of cheese and other dairy products, including ricotta, manchego, feta, yogurt, and kefir.

Sheep cheese hasn’t yet entered into the mainstream of South Carolina consumption, but Webster is determined to do her part to change that. Dairy products made from sheep milk are great for people with lactose intolerance, in addition to having higher amounts of protein, zinc, calcium, amino acids, and other nutrients compared to cow milk.

Although Webster’s business idea is novel, her mission statement is not. “We love people, and we love the animals we work with,” she states with a smile, “and we want to do the right thing and take care of both.”

Webster is excited to begin working with ACRE “to help us reach our full potential,” and plans to use the ACRE funding to purchase equipment for milk storage, hire more personnel, and increase marketing.

BRIAN WHEAT COMMON JOY

Headquartered in Charleston, Common Joy is currently the only company growing luffa commercially in our state. Luffa, a unique member of the cucurbit family with multiple uses, is a sub-tropical plant that grows well in the coastal regions of our state.

Luffa has the distinction of being prized in two different industries: skincare and consumption. When fresh, the gourds, blossoms, and tendrils are edible, and highly desired by specialty restaurants in the area. When dried, the gourd is valued as an excellent sponge for cleaning and bathing.

“As people start looking into different crops that could be viable for South Carolina,” Wheat explains, “luffa could be a suitable choice. It serves a number of different purposes — it’s an edible crop, a value-added crop, and resistant to a number of pests and diseases.” He plans to use the ACRE funding for increased marketing and product development.

TY AND TRACY WOODARD COVERED IN COTTON

Covered in Cotton, based out of Florence, is unique in two ways. First of all, they are in the rare position of making a value-added product from their own cotton crop. And second, they are actively focused on charity, while at the same time growing their for-profit business.

Using the highest quality upland cotton from their farm, Covered in Cotton produces sturdy yet luxurious cotton blankets and throws. The business was inspired by the story of their young son, who in 2015 battled for his life with bacterial meningitis in a Columbia children’s hospital and was comforted by a blanket given by a nurse. Because of this experience, the Woodards now donate one blanket for every 10 they sell to local children’s hospitals.

“Our goal,” Tracy elaborates, “is not primarily to sell blankets, but to help connect people with agriculture, and to show them where their food, fiber and fuel comes from. In addition, we work to share the story of our son’s illness, and the grace and hope from God that resulted from that.”

The Woodards plan to use their ACRE funding to grow their product line into new bedding and baby swaddle products. “A business that is ag-related is very unique in and of itself,” Tracy concludes, “and we are excited to begin working with ACRE to support our mission.”

SCHOOL DISTRICT SHARES FREE FRESH PRODUCE AT WEEKLY MARKET

BY EVA MOORE

Perhaps the only thing better than healthy summer produce is free healthy summer produce, and the Lexington-Richland 5 School District is sharing some of South Carolina’s bounty with low-income residents this summer by hosting a free farmers market. “It’s pretty cool to give away produce and not charge money,” said Todd Bedenbaugh, the district’s director of student nutrition.

For the first market, held June 20 at an Irmo apartment complex, Lexington-based WP Rawl donated 14 cases of produce. School district staff volunteered their time to make the market a reality.

Each family that visited the market was given a free bag of fresh corn, squash, and kale. Bedenbaugh said staff also cooked a squash recipe and offered samples and recipes to market visitors. “We hope they’ll eat healthy, and hopefully have extra food,” he said. Bedenbaugh said the idea to hold the market came from Karen Tanner, wife of University of South Carolina athletics director Ray Tanner.

The district plans to hold the market every Thursday through August 1 (July 4 excluded) at the Irmo Village Apartments. In future years, they plan to expand the number of market sites.

PRODUCE PROFESSIONALS GET UP CLOSE WITH SC FARMS

BY EVA MOORE

What do Walmart, meal kit delivery service HelloFresh, food service supplier US Foods, and regional grocers like Harps, Rouses, and Food Lion all have in common? They need reliable sources of fresh produce. The Southeast Produce Council’s STEP-UPP program helps new buyers at these and other companies learn about the produce industry, from farms to packinghouses and beyond. And last week, the 2019 class of up-and-coming buyers got a chance to learn about what South Carolina has to offer.

The 11-member group toured Lexington County-based WP Rawl, which grows greens and other produce; peach growers Titan Farms; produce processor McEntire Produce; Vertical Roots, a hydroponic lettuce farm in Summerville; Watsonia Farms, which grows organic peaches and other fruits and vegetables; and Coosaw Farms, which grows blueberries, watermelons, and cabbages.

“I think they were pleasantly surprised by the technology and the passion our growers had,” said the South Carolina Department of Agriculture’s Katie Pfeiffer, who helped coordinate the visit.

The STEP-UPP participants also shared some meals, including a dinner at West Columbia farm-to-table restaurant Terra sponsored by the SC Peach Council.
