MAKE IT COUNT

2020 CENSUS IS CRUCIAL FOR RURAL COMMUNITIES

BY EVA MOORE

Every 10 years, the U.S. Census Bureau attempts to count every person in the United States.

In some rural areas, that's a tough task. Households may have P.O. boxes instead of mailing addresses, internet access may be limited or non-existent, and people may move around a lot, among other reasons.

But the U.S. Census is essential to making sure rural South Carolinians, including farmers, get access to government funds and representation in Congress.

Census data are used to draw U.S. House and state legislative districts. That's crucial for rural communities, notes Eddie Wells, South Carolina state statistician for the USDA's National Agricultural Statistical Service.

"The rural population needs to be properly represented in Congress, and the only way to get that representation is through the Census," Wells says. "We want to make sure it's a strong representation of what our rural communities look like now versus what they looked like 10 years ago."

The Census also helps elected officials and government agencies determine funding for various programs.

Take the Farm Bill, for example. USDA conducts its own Census of Agriculture every five years, collecting information about crops, acreage, farms and farmers across the country. Using USDA data along with U.S. Census data, lawmakers decide how to dole out money to various agriculture-related programs. When there's a disaster and farmers apply for relief, these data help determine how much money is allocated. The recent CARES Act, a relief package to help businesses and individuals affected by the COVID-19 response, also relies on such data.

"When we talk about the trillions of taxpayer dollars being spent in this country, certainly we want the rural communities to receive their portion of that," Wells says.

South Carolina Sen. Floyd Nicholson's district covers parts of Abbeville, Greenwood, McCormick and Saluda counties — some of it rural, including several tracts the U.S. Census Bureau designates as "Hard to Count" because of their previous low response rates. He says the Census is crucial to his district — even though some people aren't thrilled about participating.

"A lot of times people are hesitant to complete the Census because people don't trust the government," Nicholson says. "They think their information's going to be used for other reasons. It's not. This is just a count of the number of individuals in the country to ensure that we receive funding."

Under federal law, the Census Bureau cannot release any identifiable information about individuals, households, or businesses, even to law enforcement.

Completing the census is easy. From a computer or phone, you can visit my2020census.gov. You can also complete the census by phone by calling 844-330-2020. In mid-April, the Census Bureau began mailing out paper questionnaires to households that had not yet responded online or by phone. Census takers will follow up in person with those who do not respond by other means.

HUGH E. WEATHERS

A SPRING LIKE NONE BEFORE

It's safe to say that my spring updates usually look a little different than this one will. By this time last year, the State Farmers Markets had already hosted Spring Plant and Flower shows, our agritourism division was gearing up to host Ag+Art tours across the state, and our department had welcomed groups of 4H and FFA students to the State House grounds. All of the above have not happened or will not be happening. This scenario has probably played out a million times across our country lately.

While some of these events have been delayed or canceled, some things never change. The South Carolina Department of Agriculture remains committed to serving our state's agriculture industry, and SCDA staff continue to be accessible and ready to help. I have personally been taking steps to ensure that agribusiness remains at the forefront of discussions with local, state, and federal leadership by facilitating calls between U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham's office and local producers, distributors and industry leaders to address concerns and provide resources.

My office also had a call with the South Carolina Restaurant and Lodging Association for farmers, wholesalers, chefs and restaurant owners to ask questions and raise concerns regarding supply chain and the reopening of restaurants as COVID-19 related restrictions are lifted. We are working on a campaign on behalf of our farmers and restaurants to encourage folks to come out and (safely) support both.

The adaptability and resilience of local producers and South Carolina distributors, four of which were recently awarded contracts through USDA's Farmers to Families Food Box Program, is commendable and serves as a comforting constant during this time of unknowns. Many South Carolinians have used a resource on SCDA's website (agriculture.sc.gov/coronavirus/local) to find safe and local farm-fresh food during COVID-19. This resource has become increasingly important as our late spring and early summer produce are in good shape. Our strawberry season has been long, and you'll start to see South Carolina peaches and watermelon in your local grocery stores soon.

Working with Advocates for Agriculture, we have begun a South Carolina-only initiative similar to what USDA is doing nationwide. Farmers to Food Banks will be funded through private donations, and 100 percent of what's raised will go toward food purchases. Please see page 7 in this Market Bulletin for more information. Donate if you can.

PROTECT COTTON AND SOYBEAN CROPS FROM HUNGRY INSECTS

BY DENISE ATTAWAY, CLEMSON UNIVERSITY

BLACKVILLE – Cotton and soybeans are popping up all across South Carolina, and Clemson University Extension Service specialists say these major crops are susceptible to hungry insect pests.

COTTON INSECT REPORT

Charles Davis, a Clemson Extension row crops agent in Richland County, said thrips — a tiny, destructive insect — are being reported in fields where cotton is emerging.

“Cotton is just going in the ground around here and we’re seeing something we wished we didn’t see,” Davis said. “I saw a recent video which showed thrips covering a white plastic pesticide container. So, I don’t doubt the danger of thrips is present. I’ve also seen a few grasshoppers along ditch banks looking for a meal now that the fields are crispy. Soon these ‘hoppers’ will be looking for some cotton to chew up.”

Jeremy Greene, an Extension and research entomologist and professor housed at Clemson’s Edisto Research and Education Center (REC), said the tobacco thrips is a frequent pest of seedling cotton that can reduce lint yield up to 50 percent.

Many at-plant treatments are providing protection, but some don’t look so good, he said. Plots treated with aldicarb look best. Neither pyrethroids nor Lorsban should be used for thrips control in emerged cotton.

“I don’t know if we’ll see the number of thrips get as high as it did last year,” Greene said. “But there are signs of injury in cotton planted in mid-April.”

Planting cotton in mid-April in South Carolina is a little early. Depending on the weather, cotton planting usually begins in late April and continues through the month of May in South Carolina, said Clemson Extension cotton specialist Michael Jones of the Pee Dee REC.

Planting later does seem to have benefits, as research shows injury risk from thrips declines as the planting date is delayed. For early-planted cotton that is at highest risk, growers should consider using more effective at-plant insecticides that go in the furrow as an extra application (granular or liquid spray) with the seed and use seed treatments later in the planting window to reduce thrips risks. Insecticide treatments are important early-season to minimize yield loss and to ensure the crop isn’t delayed.

The thrips infestation predictor tool for cotton (TIP) advised cotton farmers not to plant early in the southern part of the state this year.

Grasshoppers are an issue right now and are best controlled when in the nymph stage, the entomologist said. Use Dimilin at a rate of 2 fluid ounces/acre to control nymphs. Pyrethroids and chlorpyrifos are good materials to use for adult grasshoppers, but controlling at the nymph stage is better as grasshoppers are difficult to control as adults, especially the big ones.

Thrips cause the most damage to seedling cotton. Image courtesy Clemson University Public Service and Agriculture

“Dimilin is a good choice to use proactively in fields where grasshoppers are expected to be a problem,” Greene said. “For farmers who are spraying emerged cotton and reacting to an insect problem, I would consider using a heavy rate of Orthene 97 for grasshopper adults and control of thrips.”

Other major pests of cotton are stink bugs, bollworm and tarnished plant bugs, but will be an issue later in the season.

SOYBEAN SITUATION

About 6 percent of the state’s soybean crop had been planted as of May 8. In his test plot, Greene has some soybean plants that have emerged. No insects have found the plants — yet.

“We’ll likely see kudzu bugs and threecornered alfalfa hoppers pretty soon,” he said.

Kudzu bugs were the most common insect pest of soybeans in 2019. Pyrethroids provide excellent control of kudzu bugs. The same treatment for grasshoppers in cotton also applies to soybeans. Use Dimilin for nymphs and a pyrethroid for adults.

Podworm, stink bugs, soybean looper and velvetbean caterpillar are other insect pests of soybean that Greene warns farmers to keep a check on later in the season.

“Don’t forget to scout your crops early for insect problems,” Greene said.

Several online tools are available on clemson.edu/extension to provide farmers with pest control information. The Clemson Pest Management Handbook – 2020 has information to help control insect and weed pests. Free mobile apps, Calibrate My Sprayer and Mix My Sprayer, help with equipment calibrations and mixing pesticides.

Deer is another pest of soybeans. White-tailed deer cause millions of dollars in damage to South Carolina’s soybean fields each year. Greene has installed a fence on his test plot to help keep deer away.

To help South Carolina farmers stay ahead of pest threats, Greene is working with Syngenta to provide timely Pest Patrol Alerts. For information, go to bit.ly/SC\_PestAlerts.

ECONOMIC IMPACTS

Cotton and soybeans are important to the South Carolina economy. Information from the South Carolina Department of Agriculture shows cotton and soybeans are two of the top 10 commodities in South Carolina. Others are broilers, turkeys, greenhouse nurseries, corn, cattle, peanuts, eggs and wheat.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture National Agricultural Statistics Service, 320,000 acres of soybeans and 297,000 acres of cotton were harvested last year. Together, these crops brought in more than $217 million to South Carolina in 2019.

FARMERS TO FOOD BANKS

Certified SC Grown, in partnership with SC Advocates for Agriculture, introduces the Farmers to Food Banks Program. South Carolina farmers will be able to deliver their products to those in need during this crisis.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

- Using these funds, food distributors across the state will purchase products from South Carolina farmers and donate that food to food banks and pantries to help bridge the gap of food insecurity caused by the COVID-19 pandemic
- 100% of the proceeds go towards food purchases
- Advocates for Agriculture is a 501c3 organization and all donations are deductible as charitable contributions.
